A. F. of L. Spurns Roosevelt NRA; House Set to Act

Committees Clear Way for Final Vote by 1 o'Clock.

Steel Reassures 425,000 Workers

Inheritance, Gift Taxes May Be Raised; New FACA Rushed.

The NRA Situation

Legislation to provide for the sharply abridged NRA was drawn and quick House approval was arranged.

The 425,000 workers in the steel industry were assured by the larger companies that there would be no changes in hours, labor or bargaining conditions.

New legislation was hurriedly drafted to provide for control of the liquor industry through a permanent Federal agency.

Reports that the President is considering heavier inheritance and gifts taxes to replace NRA as a means of spreading wealth went undenied.

American Federation of Labor announced it would not accept President Roosevelt's NRA program and would draft one of its own. It told all workers to "resist at all costs" attempts to cut wages and lengthen hours.

By Robert C. Albright.

Extension of a dormant, codeless, but still living NRA organization until next April 1 yesterday was speedily approved by the House Ways and Means Committee in substantially the form asked by the President.

But the resolution unexpectedly failed to repeal authority for the President to approve "agreements" voluntarily entered into by an industry or partial suspension of anti-trust laws for such compacts.

Although the Administration gave no hint of making use of these agreements in its reconstructed NRA program, the omission appeared certain to arouse blunt opposition in a strong Senate anti-NRA bloc. Quick House approval, however, was taken for granted.

House rules machinery immediately swung into motion to give the limited measure right of way in the chamber at 11 o'clock this morning. With only ten days left of the Blue Eagle's legal life-span, leaders were racing against time.

The House stage was set for NRA extension, even as the American Federation of Labor announced it would not accept President Roosevelt's program and would draft one of its own. The federation issued a call to all workers to "resist at all costs" attempts to cut wages and lengthen hours. President William Green said this probably would mean strikes.

The Ways and Means Committee count was 19 to 5, 2 of the Republican members voting with 17 Democrats for extension. Five of the minority voted "present." Vainly these sought a Federal Trade Commission study of a possible "voluntary trade agreement" set-up.

Two Hours of Debate.

Representative John J. O'Connor, of New York, who had held his Rules Committee in readiness, called it together at once and reported out a rule limiting debate in the House to one hour, but permitting amendments. Another hour's debate was allowed on the rule.

The resolution agreed to, after extended conferences with Donald R. Richberg, Blue Eagle administrator, was a simple, eight-line arrangement, extending the NRA shell 9½ months, but repealing delegated power for the Presdient to approve, prescribe or enforce codes of fair competition.

Democratic members of the committee insisted the resolution, while clearly forbidding imposition of codes, still left the path open for voluntary business fair practice "agreements," with the same provisions for anti-trust law suspension now contained in the present law.

Voluntary Pacts Possible.

"This is a natural and logical solution, giving business a chance to see what it can do—giving them an opportunity, if they wish, to make voluntary agreements," Representative John W. McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, told the Rules Committee.

McCormack expressed doubt that business would avail itself of these voluntary means, however, because of probable noncooperation by a 5 to 10 per cent fringe of "chiselers."

The rule was agreed to swiftly, following a sharply partisan debate, with Republicans clamorously charging the Ways and Means Committee with reporting out the resolution without giving "a satisfactory explanation of what was left of NRA."

Representative Carl E. Mapes (Republican), Michigan, pointed out that the price-fixing ban agreed to by the Senate was eliminated by the House Committee, and industry

VISCOUNT BYNG.

Marshal Byng Is Dead; Hero Of Vimy Ridge

Only Allenby Now Left of Britain's Great World War Leaders.

By the Associated Press.

Thorpe-le-Soken, Essex, England, June 6. — Death took another of Britain's great war heroes today, leaving only one outstanding leader, Lord Allenby, alive.

Field Marshal Julian Hedworth Byng, First Viscount Byng of Vimy, "hero of Vimy Ridge," first commander of the Canadian Corps in the Great War, former Governor General of Canada and peace-time reorganizer of London's Metropolitan Police, died at 2 a. m. in Thorpe Hall after an emergency operation. He was 72 years old.

The dogged old fighter's death came only three weeks after that of another spectacular figure of the war period, Col. T. E. Lawrence, the famed "Lawrence of Arabia," who died May 19 of injuries suffered in an accident while motorcycling.

Used Cavalry Tactics.

Viscount Byng had been ill during recent years, and several months ago visited Canada and California in quest of health.

He developed acute abdominal symtoms Tuesday afternoon, an official bulletin said, making an immediate operation imperative. It was performed yesterday. "Unhappily, heart failure followed," the bulletin said. He died early today.

Byng was the creator of the Canadian Corps, the volunteer organization that performed notably in the war. He was called to the western front shortly after the opening of the World War; he was perhaps the last man in history to make cavalry compaigns valuable in modern warfare; he was the genius of the triumph of Vimy Ridge when 100,000 Canadians under his leadership overran that vital rise of land on Easter Monday, 1917.

Reorganized Police.

After that he was made commander of the Third Army Corps, saw his Cambrai offensive neutralized for lack of troops and support, was promoted to general late in 1917 and headed the Third Army as it hung on courageously in the teeth of the last great German offensive. He also took part in the final allied drive.

Although he sought seclusion after the war, he was appointed

Bank Defiant, Won't Reveal Mellon Data

Ignores Subpena of Tax Board for Records on Stock Deal.

U. S. Attorneys to Seek Court Order; Hogan Scores Jackson.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Scorching statements were exchanged yesterday by opposing counsel in the Mellon income tax case as the Union Trust Co., Pittsburgh, defied the authority of the Board of Tax Appeals.

The bank declined to obey a subpena for production of records of financial transactions between the petitioner, Andrew W. Mellon, and his brother, the late R. B. Mellon.

With the possibility of contempt of court proceedings always in the background, Government counsel will appear shortly before a Federal judge in Pittsburgh and request an order for the papers as the board has no authority to enforce its subpenas.

Not "Above the Law."

Robert H. Jackson, Internal Revenue Bureau counsel, described the development as the most significant turning point in the four-month hearing.

"Every step possible," he flared, "will be taken to enforce compliance and to establish that the Union Trust Co. is not above the law."

Frank H. Hogan, outspoken chief of Mellon counsel, informed of the Jackson comment, accepted the challenge in caustic language.

"The Union Trust Co." he replied, "hasn't said it was above the law. Its attitude was very respectful.

"Is Mr. Jackson once more trying his case in the newspapers or in the courts? If he had done more trying in the court and less in the press the case would have been over by now."

Explaining he spoke for Mellon rather than the bank, Hogan added: "We're trying Mr. Mellon's tax case and we ought not to be called upon to have tried out in Mr. Mellon's case transactions which relate to other people and with which he had no connection.

10,000 Typed Pages.

"It's bad enough to have 10,000 typewritten pages of testimony at terrific expense covering practically every activity of Mr. Mellon's long life without also dragging in transactions of other people.

"Mr. Mellon doesn't know and never has known anything about the stock sales which the Government now seeks to bring in evidence on."

Hogan and Federal lawyers also differed over whether the power of the Tax Appeals Board to subpena evidence has been tested in the courts.

Several Internal Revenue Bureau lawyers agreed no person or corporation ever before declined to submit evidence subpenaed since the board was established more than a decade ago.

In the Oesterlein Machine Co. case of 1927, Hogan answered, the Supreme Court required the commissioner of internal revenue to respond to a subpena of the board.

"Certainly the Union Trust Co. could not be criticized if it followed a precedent set by the Government itself," he declared.

There was a belief in informed quarters that if the Federal court should uphold the Tax Board the bank would abide by the ruling. Clarence Stanley is acting head of the bank. H. C. McEldowney, president, died a few months ago. Its directors include Paul Mellon, son of the petitioner; former Senator David A. Reed, Roy Hunt, president of the Aluminum Co., and A. V. Davis, board chairman of the same firm.

Six-Month Delay Seen.

In any event, however, another delay of at least six months in the Mellon hearing appeared certain as the losing side probably will take the ruling of the Pittsburgh judge to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

John G. Frazer, of the law firm of Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay, signed the letter in which the bank notified the board of its refusal to abide by the subpena.

Reunited in Shadow of Chair

Millens, Faber Die in 'Chair,' Repenting Sin

Youthful Killers Display Bravado; Son to Hang With Woman.

By the United Press.

State Prison, Boston, Friday, June 7.—Repentent at the end, asking God to have mercy on their souls, the Millen brothers and Abe Faber, killer-bandits, died in the electric chair here early today.

In the shadowy half hour just after midnight, Murton Millen, 25, his brother, Irving, 22 and the 25-year-old Abraham M. ("Abe") Faber, college graduate, were executed for the murder of one of two policemen slain with machine guns in a $15,000 Needham bank raid 16 months ago.

State Prison, Boston, June 6.—Bravado and bitterness tonight characterized the Millen brothers and Abe Faber, spending their last few hours on earth.

Alone in their window-less death cells here in Charlestown, the young killer-bandits nervously awaited the midnight hour when Murton Millen, 25, then Irving Millen, 22, then the 25-year-old Faber walk to the electric chair in the State's fifth triple execution.

Murderers of four men during a bloody five-month reign of terror in 1933 and 1934, the trio must pay with their lives for the $15,000 Needham Trust Co. holdup in which two policemen, one the father of four young daughters, were killed by machine-gun bullets.

With hopes so scant he did not inform his disconsolate client, Attorney William R. Scharton persisted in frantic last-minute efforts to save Faber. Insistent that the sallow, inventive-minded graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology has inherited traits of insanity from a long line of allegedly defective ancestors, Scharton pleaded vainly with Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis at Washington for a stay of execution and further review of the case. The plea rejected, the attorney wired Governor Curley asking a 24-hour reprieve.

Mortgage Men Are Expecting Building Boom

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Continued increase in residential building throughout the Nation, with the possibility that the movement may reach boom proportions sufficient to pull the durable goods industries out of their depressed condition, are generally anticipated in the mortgage financial field, it was apparent yesterday.

This expectation is based on several factors. One is an increased demand for better and larger housing, due to the measure of recovery achieved to date. Another is a result of inflation fears. A third is the cheapness of money and increasing adoption of the long-term amortised moragage loan, promoted by Government agencies.

Real estate prices, it is contended, are definitely showing an upward trend, both as to rentals and cost of homes. Thus the movement to acquire homes, it is argued by experts in the field, has been given an impetus either by the belief that the property is an investment that will appreciate, or in an effort to escape payment of an increased rental.

Inflation Talk Prompts Buying.

Months of discussion regarding inflation, it is further reported, also prompted many persons to buy homes in the belief that prices will rise and that thus they will protect their savings or stand to gain from appreciation in the value of property bought on credit.

These trends have been reflected in a sharply increased number of real estate foreclosures, as previously noted by The Post. The reluctance either to force the sale of property on defaulted loans or to acquire it, prevalent during the depths of the depression when values were falling or uncertain, is now disappearing.

Another stimulus to residential construction has come from the

MacDonald's Cabinet Due To Quit Today

Stanley Baldwin Slated to Become Premier in Shake-up.

Sir Samuel Hoare, Not Eden, to Get British Foreign Post.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 6.—A new cabinet with Stanley Baldwin at its helm, will take over the governing of Great Britain tomorrow—unless all predictions go astray.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will call at Buckingham Palace to resign the office he has held continuously since 1929; and Baldwin now lord president of the council and leader of the Conservative Party, will take his place.

It will not be long, political quarters predicted tonight, until the veteran MacDonald, stanch champion of the cause of peace and erstwhile Laborite, is out altogether.

Another cabinet shake-up will take place immediately after the forthcoming general elections, in which the National government will go to the country with Baldwin its titular as well as its active leader, and the white-haired MacDonald will be forced to retire, these quarters said.

New Cabinet Line-up.

A partial line-up of the reconstructed cabinet, in which youth comes to the fore, was given unofficially this evening as follows:

Prime Minister—Stanley Baldwin.

Lord President of the council—Ramsay MacDonald.

Lord Chancellor — Viscount Hailsham, now Secretary for War.

Foreign Secretary—Sir Samuel Hoare, now Secretary for India.

Home Secretary—Sir John Simon, now Foreign Secretary.

Simon also is expected to be deputy leader of the House of Commons.

Dominions Secretary — J. H. Thomas, as at present.

Colonial Secretary — Malcolm MacDonald, son of the present Prime Minister, who is undersecretary for dominions.

Secretary of State for Air—Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, now undersecretary, who probably will be raised to the peerage.

First Lord of the Admiralty—Sir Bolton Eyres-Monsell, as at present.

Minister of Labor — Ernest Brown, now Minister of Mines.

Eden's Selection Was Due.

No name was mentioned for the post of Minister of Mines, which Brown vacates.

Six other cabinet ministers—there are 20 in the present list—are expected to remain unchanged.

Aside from MacDonald's and Baldwin's expected switch, biggest news in the latest line-up was Sir Samuel Hoare's prospective designation as foreign secretary.

It had been confidently predicted that all-important post would go to Capt. Anthony Eden, 38-year-old lord privy seal and Britain's foremost exponent of peripatetic diplomacy, whose recent triumphs on the continent added substance to his characterization as the "rising star" of the foreign office.

Some quarters believed Eden would retain his present post, which would be raised to full cabinet rank.

The stage apparently was set for the withdrawal from the cabinet, no later than October, when elections probably will be held, of MacDonald's little National Labor Party.

First Speech Tomorrow.

The group has three men in the tentative new ministry—the elder and younger MacDonalds and Thomas—but all three apparently face inevitable defeat without the support of the powerful Conservative majority.

It was pointed out the Conservaties now have no reason to support them, while regular Laborites are impatiently awaiting the chance to punish them for their "treason" in bolting the party when the National government was formed in 1931.

Wide interest attaches to Baldwin's first speech as prime minister Saturday at Himley. It is believed he may indicate the date of elections, which many members of Parliament are certain will be held in the next few months.

Support of Parliament to Save Franc Asked by New Premier.

Stand Maintaining Gold Is Unchanged

Massing of Thousands of Tax Protestors Adds to Tension.

By the United Press.

Paris (Friday), June 7.—Premier Pierre Laval announced early today the formation of a new coalition government as police and guards clashed with rioters in the boulevards, denouncing the nation's leaders.

Royaltists provoked a scuffle at the end of a meeting of 4,000 persons protesting high taxes, on Montparnasse. Four were wounded, one seriously, in the clash. The police dispersed the rioters, making no arrests.

Premier Laval, an independent, holds the foreign affairs portfolio in the new cabinet.

Other Members:

Ministers of state without portfolios — Deputies Pierre-Etienne Flandin, former premier, Left Republican; Eduard Herriot, Radical-Socialist, and Louis Marin, Republican Federation.

Minister of finance — Senator Marcel Regnier, Left Democrat.

Minister of interior—Deputy Joseph Paganon, Radical-Socialist.

Minister of national education—Deputy Philip Marcombes, Radical-Socialist.

Minister of Commerce—Deputy George Bonnet, Radical Socialist.

Minister of Posts, Deputy George Mandel, Independent.

Minister of Labor, Deputy Louis Frossard, former Socialist.

Minister of Public Health, Ernst Lafont, Neo-Socialist.

Appeals for Support.

"I did my duty in forming a cabinet and I hope the nation and Parliament will do their duty in supporting me," Laval said.

The premier took his ministers to Elysee Palace at 3:10 a. m. and presented them to President Lebrun.

The first cabinet meeting is scheduled for this afternoon before facing the Chamber of Deputies for the first time at 6 p. m. when Laval will ask for full powers to deal with the financial situation and prevent devaluation of the franc.

It was on this issue of dictatorial powers that the cabinets of Pierre-Etienne Flandin and Fernand Bouisson fell during the past week.

Laval's program will be to maintain the franc at its present gold parity, attaining the necessary reduction of pressure on the treasury by budgetary deflation. He will insist that Parliament grant him power to rule by decree through October while Parliament takes an enforced holiday.

Rioters Fight Police.

Violence broke out in downtown Paris last night as darkness settled over the uneasy capital. Steel-helmeted mobile guards, carrying rifles, were thrown into action, guarding the statesmen battling for confidence among the dissatisfied po-

Japan Triples Armed Forces In North China

Parades With Field Pieces Through Native Areas of Tientsin.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Tientsin, China (Friday), June 7. The Japanese military today revealed plans for tripling their armed forces in north China, below the Great Wall, as preparedness in the event alleged anti-Japanese terrorism continues in this area.

Troop replacements arrived this week and more are due shortly. The Japanese forces held an impressive display in the native Chinese city of Tientsin today, adding to the rising tension.

The new reinforcements are to relieve the present details, but those due for relief will be retained indefinitely, effecting an actual 300 per cent increase of Japanese armed forces in north China shortly.

War Council Called.

The Japanese called a "council of war" among their leading officers in the north China area for Saturday, to consider fresh steps.

Japanese troops with field pieces and machine guns, led by mounted officers, marched through the Chinese native areas of Tientsin.

United States Minister Nelson T. Johnson cut short a visit to Nanking, the national capital, on the Yangtze River, and hurried north to the scene of the trouble. The legation still is at Peiping, although the capital was removed to Central China in 1928.

The Chinese authorities made a broad conciliatory gesture to Japan's latest demands for cessation of anti-Japanese activities in the demilitarized north China area, and it was hoped conflict could be averted.

Gen. Yu Hsueh Chung, whose ouster Japan demanded, was relieved of his duties as Governor of Hopei.

He withdrew to Paoting-Fu, seat of the old Imperial Military Academy, 100 miles southwest of Peiping on the trunk railway to Hankow, far to the south, where he will assume duties as commander of the bandit suppression forces along the borders of Szechuen, Kansu and Shensi provinces, in China's rugged, mountainous northwest frontier.

To replace Gen. Yu's forces, the Thirty-second Army Division proceeded to Tientsin to maintain order.

Withdrawal of Gen. Yu lessened

Shrine Chanters to Serenade City From Start of Conclave

Thousands Will Begin Arriving Here Sunday for 61st Annual Session; Railroad Trains to Offer Beds to Many.

The Shrine convention opening Sunday will be one continuous serenade, according to plans announced yesterday by Theodore C. Lewis, chairman of the music committee. Six hundred "chanters," representing 24 temples, will sing their appreciation of Washington's hospitality in public buildings and on street corners, in hospitals and in parks.

Togged in their gay Oriental uniforms, each unit having its own distinctive dress, the Shrine choristers will perform at St. Elizabeths Hospital, the Masonic and Eastern Star Home, in Franklin Park, Children's Hospital and elsewhere, said Mr. Lewis. Medinah Temple, Chicago, will send the largest group, 56. Almas, the host temple, will be represented by 20 chanters.

By train, bus and water, the thousands of nobles converging upon the Capital for their sixty-first annual session will begin arriving Sunday in large numbers. The schedule was disclosed by R. E. Coleman, vice chairman of the transportation committee.

First to reach the city will be Anah Temple, Bangor, Me. Following at close intervals on Sunday will be Beni Kedem, Charleston, W. Va.; Cyprus, Albany, N. Y.; El Hasa, Ashland, Ky.; Kerbela, Knoxville, Tenn.; Oasis, Charlotte, N. C.; Osiris, Wheeling, W. Va.; Rameses, Toronto, Canada; Yasrab, Atlanta, Ga., and Zor, Madison, Wis.

In the Zor Temple contingent will be its three famous mascots, Zor, Zora and Rufus, three camels.

Other units will arrive in Washington all day Monday and Tuesday morning, some being scheduled to reach the Capital scarcely in time to participate in the escort parade Tuesday, which begins at 10 a. m.

Zor is one of the temples whose members will sleep in their Pullman cars during their week's stay here. The camels, though, will be boarded out for the week in a local riding stable.

Medinah, Mahi, Morocco and Salaam are among other temples scheduled for railroad yard billeting, said Mr. Coleman. The temporary residents will be favored with air-con-

Pius Seeks Election Reform To Unite Catholic Branches

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Vatican City, June 6.—Pope Pius XI is studying methods for an extensive reform in the election of Popes, the United Press learned from an exclusive source tonight, to bring unity between the Roman Catholic and Oriental churches.

The pontiff has called in experts from various denominations to advise him on procedure in the reform. At present the Pope is elected by the College of Cardinals.

The reform under consideration would consist of allowing the church or Oriental rite to participate directly in the election of the pontiff, through representatives for each denomination.

Conclaves of the cardinals thus would be attended by the patriarchs under the jurisdiction of the congregation of the Oriental Church, which the Pope heads.

These denominations would be represented by patriarchs of the Syrians, Maronites, Melchiodes, Chaldeans, Armenians and Copts (Egypt) See, of which Beirut, Bekorki, Damascus, Mossul, Bzommar and Alexandria are the central cities.

The reform, which is regarded as certain, is hailed as epoch making in the history of the Catholic Church, as well as an important move toward union of the churches holding to the Catholic faith but keeping to their different rites.

Gang Fails to Claim $286,000 Offered to Ransom Rich Cuban

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Havana, June 6.—An effort to pay $286,000 ransom for the release of former Senator Antonio San Miguel, 78-year-old kidnaped multimillionaire, failed this afternoon when the messenger bearing the big bundle of bills could not contact the kidnapers.

Business associates of the aged rail magnate, who was seized with four servants yesterday afternoon, said they were confident the near-record ransom would be paid shortly.

Contact with the band of eight kidnapers at the place designated failed "probably because the messenger was slightly late in getting there with the money," they said.

Police late this afternoon revealed that Jose Franco, San Miguel's gardener, was kidnaped at the same time the wealthy financier and three other servants were seized.

There was no dickering with the captors, it was learned, as to the ransom price. The original demand was $286,000 and business associates hastily got the money together, in United States currency, as soon as they received word from the kidnapers.

While Army secret service men denied reports that four suspects were held at Camp Columbia, police announced the arrest of Arturo Mujica, who, they said, sold the mango cart the kidnapers used to cover the snatch.

It was learned that the band balked at releasing the captives until it succeeded in exchanging the ransom money.

The pair was working on a swinging scafffold suspended from roofing of the M street house. It was loaded with heavy paint buckets. A chain supporting one end snapped and the men toppled to the ground. Passersby hurried them to the hospital. Gray, physicians reported, is not expected to live.

Between You and Me

New Deal Stands By AAA; Supreme Court May Get Publicity Man; Code Money Is Problem.

By Raymond Clapper

Possibly it is only imagination but some people think they detect a significant difference between the way the Administration has applied the lesson of the Supreme Court decision to NRA as contrasted with AAA.

In the case of NRA, the Administration has given up and left business to shift for itself. That is what a good many business critics of the New Deal asked for. Mr. Roosevelt is going to give them a full dose.

But not so with AAA. The farmers want their benefit payments continued. So Administration lawyers have gone over the pending AAA amendments and checked them word by word against the Schechter decision, which, incidentally, was rendered on a code drawn not by NRA but by AAA.

Secretary Wallace is attempting to bring AAA into line with the Schechter decision.

AAA lawyers are striking out the word "license" wherever it appears and using the term "order." Existing processing taxes, fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, are to be written into law with a 20 per cent leeway. They are going further and inserting a proviso that the existing rates shall stand in case the Supreme Court denies the executive branch power to change them within a 20 per cent leeway.

These are typical of numerous changes being made to salvage every possible scrap of AAA. It is the opposite course to that pursued with regard to NRA, where practically everything was thrown out without any attempt to revise it to meet the Schechter decision.

Abandoning payment of millions of dollars in subsidies to the farmers is not so easy, and the Administration apparently is willing to go to any length to keep these benefit payments from being cut off.

Even the Supreme Court may have a publicity man when it begins operations next fall in its new marble palace. Not that the dignified justices want to get their names in the newspapers more often. Nor are they thinking of putting out propaganda handouts to the press. Certainly they are not looking for ghost writers to prepare their decisions in snappy English. And they aren't thinking of engaging a press agent just because every New Deal agency has a publicity staff.

The fact is that the court has always acted as if newspapers didn't exist. Talk about it being back in the horse and buggy stage, you wouldn't think to see the court in action on decision Mondays, that it knew there were such things as newspapers. You know they do, of course, because some of them read the gossip columns with as much relish as their wives do.

The trouble is that they have refused to take cognizance of the mechanical needs of the press. Long ago Presidents of the United States adopted the practice of providing advance copies of their addresses and messages to Congress so that newspaper publication would be facilitated. The Supreme Court isn't ready to go that far. But there is talk of engaging a superintendent of information or some such attache, whose job will be to see that after decisions are read, the press can obtain copies of the text.

The most haphazard lack of arrangement has prevailed. Only a few copies of printed decisions are handed to the clerk of the court for distribution. Dozens of lawyers and a score of newspaper correspondents scramble for these precious copies. In one recent instance a lawyer represented himself as a Washington Post reporter in an unsuccessful effort to snatch the text of one decision. Many newspaper correspondents are unable to obtain copies at all and must borrow from personal friends among their colleagues.

Nothing would please the newspaper corps in Washington more than to see the Supreme Court engage some executive officer who would organize the mechanics of giving out decisions and insure that enough copies are printed.

Another promising young newspaper correspondent has given up his position voluntarily to become an Administration employe. He will be associated with Dr. Rex Tugwell in the Rural Resettlement Administration, taking a salary reduction in the transfer.

The most unfortunate result of such retirements from newspaper work is that it takes good reporters out of the business at a time when there was never greater need for accurate, intelligent, fair and complete reporting of national affairs.

The folding up of the NRA code regime has left a number of code authorities with large funds on hand and a problem of what to do with this money.

NRA has officially notified all code authorities that they no longer have any official existence or official status. They are being advised to consult their private legal counsel concerning "past actions taken in good faith under an innocent misconception concerning the validity of the law" as NRA puts it. This is a tip-off that they would be wise to get set to meet lawsuits. One coal man in Cleveland is threatening suit against his code authority for causing his prosecution and sentence to a large fine and six months in jail, not to mention the damage to his business reputation.

NRA has also notified code authorities to make no further disbursements of funds except on advice of counsel. They also are advised to arrange for the liquidation of funds on hand, by consent of the parties in interest or submission of a plan for court approval.

Code authorities have collected huge funds by assessment from code members, some running into million-dollar figures. One business firm has been assessed a total of about $70,000 a year to various code authorities under which it operates. These firms are trying to get their money back.

Many code authorities are closely linked with trade associations and are trying to induce subscribing members to authorize diversion of these code funds to the corresponding trade association.

Many NRA employes, having practically no work to do, are playing golf.

They have added a new term to the game. An "eagle" is two strokes under par. When they make a hole in two over par they call it a "Blue Eagle."

Delay in the works program has at last been explained. Harry Hopkins is now the dominating figure, and the trend is away from heavy projects to the small ones which employ relatively more hand labor. But what is causing the delay, one rival official at PWA says, is that Hopkins is waiting for autumn leaves to fall so the raking can begin.

Vimy Ridge Hero, 72, Dies in Britain

Governor General of Canada, leaving "a tired old man" in 1926.

Two years later he was called to reorganize the Metropolitan Police, riddled by charges of bribery and collusion, and spent three years in that task. He was credited with organizing the automobile flying squads, the police wireless system and police telephone call boxes, and gained fame for his "clean-up" of the West End, in which more than 40 places of dubious repute were closed.

British and foreign governments heaped honors upon him, and Parliament, granting him $150,000, thanked him for "distinguished services." His wife survives him. There is no heir to his title.

Foe of Long Is Charged With Real Estate Fraud

New Orleans, June 6 (AP).—Col. John P. Sullivan, a major political opponent of Senator Huey P. Long and a Louisiana dispenser of Roosevelt Administration patronage, today was charged with operating a confidence game in real estate deals.

The charges, contained in three bills of information, were filed in criminal district court by James O'Connor, assistant attorney general. It was charged that Sullivan "unlawfully and feloniously" obtained title to $70,000 worth of property through loans from the Hibernia Homestead Co. and sale and resale between the Homestead and the Navillus Realty Co. Sullivan issued a statement describing the charges as an "indignity."

Commencement Dog 'Run Out' of Armory

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., June 6.—A brown, flop-eared dog, which apparently makes a speciality of commencements, had a brief moment of glory today when it paraded in the Naval Academy armory with members of the graduating class.

When the colors were being presented at the Academy Tuesday, the dog wandered about the field with the middies.

At St. John's College commencement yesterday it spent the morning lounging in front of the speakers' stand.

As the graduates filed into the crowded armory today, the dog trotted up the aisle toward the rostrum.

Its adventure came to an end, however, when it was seized by a watchman and removed from the armory.

Police said the child was playing around the fountain atop the subterranean Senate garage when she fell into the concrete driveway. She suffered a fractured skull.

Maryland Picks Road Officials For 2 Counties

Plan to Effect Economies in Mantenance Reterated by Commssion.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., June 6.—The State Roads Commission today announced the appointment of road supervisors in two counties, Frederick and Washington, to succeed three supervisers who received notices June 1 that their services weer not needed.

Frank W. Rothenhoefer was named superviser in Frederick County and Charles H. Rinehart in Washington County.

The commission reiterated its announcement made in connection connection with letters to a number of merit system employes of the road commission June 1 that their posts would be discontinued because the commission intends to reduce maintenance costs so that more money will be available for new highways.

Since the commission announced last week that it would discontinue the service on road debts incurred by counties prior to the State taking over the roads in 1933, as well as interest, the commission's offices have been besieged by delegations fro mat least six counties urging rescinding of the ordes. In some of these counties the commission has been paying since 1933 as much as $80,000 annually in amortization of bonds and interest, leaving little for new road construction.

The commission informed the der would mean that very few roads would be constrorted this year in any of these coonties. Some of the counties would have their share of the gasoline tax receipts applied to debt services, while others felt the $3 000,000 bond issue was intended to take care of this service.

2 Escape in Tunnels After Subway Stick-up

New York, June 6.—In the best Jesse James tradition, two youths in their 'teens today held up a subway train and escaped with $2,100 snatched from a girl passenger.

Swiftly carrying out the robbery in the fraction of a minute, a subway train stopped at the Wilson avenue station, Brooklyn, the robbers cowed 25 passengers in the center car with pistols, stole a pay roll Freda Weiner, 22 was carrying, forced the conductor to open the doors for them, and vanished into the dark tunnel.

Police from ten radio patrol cars followed them into the underground labyrinth, but searched in vain for the robbers.

Double Killing Climaxes Love Bared in Diary

Waning Romance of Slayer and Girl Victim Told in Baltimore.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, June 6.—A diary and a series of letters giving a day-by-day account of the waning romance that ended yesterday as Arnold Piper, a young attorney, killed Miss Marguerite Griffith and then committed suicide, were discovered today by police.

The letters and diary lay unnoticed all last night in a truck which Piper had borrowed to go to the young woman's home, where he killed her. They were found today and turned over to the coroner.

The diary told how Piper, 38, had accompanied the young woman to her office and had taken her to luncheon and supper parties. Earlier entries indicated a warm friendship, but later entries indicated a rift in their affections. The last entry, written last week, read:

"I met M. We had a fuss, as usual."

The letters had been written by Miss Griffith to Piper.

A note found on Piper's body expressed resentment at the girl's family for not allowing him to see her and, according to police, expressed a determination to prevent her from seeing other men if he could not have her.

Police said Piper, disguised by a pair of dark glasses and a false mustache, went to Miss Griffith's home yesterday. Because of the disguise, he was not recognized immediately and managed to shoulder his way inside.

Mrs. Esther Hinman, Miss Griffith's sister, ran for help. When she returned, Piper was dead and her sister dying.

Dr. Paul Schenker, coroner, has returned a verdict of suicide as to Piper and one of homicide as to Miss Griffith.

The young woman's body has been sent to Owings in Calvert County for burial. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon for Piper at the home of his father, Augustus A. Piper, one of the oldest members of the Baltimore County bar.

Auto Tourists Warned About Skyline Drive

Motorists contemplating tours this week-end over Skyline Drive, in the proposed Shenandoah National Park area, were warned yesterday by the National Park Service that although the road is open it has several stretches of fresh oil.

Final surfacing of the scenic drive, which was visited by 30,000 automobilists last month, is now under way and the work will take about two months. This means that automobile passengers will be compelled to negotiate short stretches of oil-spattered highway at the peril of their cars and garments.

"Every effort is being made to complete the work on that portion of the highway between Panorama and Skyland by the middle of June," said the announcement, "in preparation for the meeting at Skyland of the National Conference on State Parks."

Italian Paper Flays Britain And Talks War

Rome Sends More Troops to East Africa to Augment Force.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, June 6.—An Italian newspaper attack on Great Britain's opposition to Italy's East African plans climaxed in open talk of war between the two European nations today even as Italy rushed more soldiers into Africa.

"If it is war she (Britain) is looking for instead of peace," the newspaper Ottobre said, "she can have it."

Simultaneously 100 modern flame throwers were shipped to Benito Mussolini's war machine assembled in East Africa and the first detachment of the Sabauda Division, the third to be sent across the Mediterranean and down the Red Sea, sailed from Cagliairi, Sardinia, aboard the Metano.

Editions Signed.

"Ottobre," whose edition authorities quickly seized, said England was going far toward provoking war in Europe or even the world by placing obstacles in the way of Il Duce's African policy.

"Italy's enemy in East Africa is not so much Ethiopia as England," said its editorial which appeared after earlier editions of other newspapers—which frequently express an official viewpoint—asserted that Britain opposes Italy because she wants Ethiopia for herself.

The "Ottobre" editorial said:

"Italy does not want to find herself waging war tomorrow against a vassal of Britain. She prefers to regulate her accounts with a power which thinks she can remain in the shadow while arming the hand of an assassin."

After considering all the consequences that might follow war with the great naval powers, the newspaper said, "We are not afraid."

Points to Aviation.

"We do not always have to live under the eternal weight of Malta, Suez and Gibraltar," it asserted definitely. "The development of aviation has changed the value of certain strategic points."

The newspaper's characterization of Britain's attitude as "blackmail" and its other comment marked the high point in an editorial campaign against England which, begun several days ago, followed the "lid off" order the press received.

Observers said more bitter statements had been made against England in the past few weeks than against Germany in the last year.

Dispatch of the first contingent of the Sabauda Division was expected to be followed quickly by movement of the Gran Sasso Division, which also is ready to go.

The Gavinana and Peloriana Divisions already are in East Africa.

Park Police Report More May Speeding

Speeding arrests rose sharply while violations of traffic regulations—parking overtime, disobeying signs, etc.—were taking an abrupt decline in May, according to the monthly report of the United States Park Police, issued yesterday.

Forty-nine speeders were arrested in Capital parks last month, an increase of 20 over April. Traffic violation cases totaled 88, compared to 144 on the previous month's report. Fast driving on the Mount Vernon Memorial highway, which is patroled by park police, resulted in 32 arrests, a small increase.

Although 18 fewer persons were arrested by the 74-man force in May, compared to the April record, the total of 299 produced $300 more in fines and forfeitures.

The nine destroyers formerly held in rotating reserve, will be placed in full commission. Ingram will have his flag on the Litchfield. The squadron will consist of the Dahlgren, Overton, Preble, Tracy, Bainbridge, Goff, James, Reuben, Sturtevant, Chandler, Hovey, Long, and Southard. Raging Waters Stir New Fears In Kansas City

Crest of Kaw River Is Awaited; North Lawrence Flooded.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, June 6.—The full crest of the Kaw River flood swirled down upon Kansas City tonight as an army of dike-defenders swarmed along a 9-mile system standing between the raging waters and a populous industrial region.

Engineers said the dikes could withstand the pounding.

A peak stage of 27 feet was forecast for the Kaw as it joined the swollen Missouri River here. This was not enough to send the water over the dikes. The river rose steadily from a stage of 20.2 feet early today.

Hundreds of men toiling to strengthen the dikes breathed easier after the Missouri River crest passed—relieving the danger in a threatened simultaneous arrival here of the crests of both streams.

However, utmost vigilance was maintained along the dike system.

Weakness Develops.

The first weakness to develop was a few miles north of Kansas City, Kans. Workmen succeeded in a move similar to one which failed, and caused men to flee for their lives last night at Lawrence, Kans. They stopped the threatened gap with sand bags.

The Missouri River rose a foot at Omaha today. Army engineers said a "big bounce" was headed down the river, but that no further flood danger was seen.

City officials predicted losses in greater Kansas City would scarcely exceed damage to bridges. Two were barricaded in fear they would collapse.

Dynamite was resorted to in an effort to dislodge driftwood packed against bridges.

Meanwhile, the Missouri River seeped over the city levee and squatters were removed by police. "Shacktown" on the levee was under water.

2,000 Homeless.

Verdant regions along the rich Kaw Valley west to Topeka, the Kansas capital, lay ruined. Much of North Lawrence still was under water. An estimated 2,000 persons were homeless there and in surrounding lowlands. Dikes broke there.

Down the fertile Missouri Valley below here at least 500 homes were all or partly covered. An estimated 2,500 families were forced to flee their homes.

There were no further reports of loss of life. The figures remained at 3 for Missouri and 8 for Kansas, while rehabilitation work progressed in Nebraska, hit by floods before the Republican River rolled its torrents southward into Kansas. Nebraska's known dead stood at 104.

In Missouri, as in Kansas, Red Cross relief stations were set up by county chapters.

While there was a feeling of some relief in Kansas City, the Missouri River below here continued a steady rise. Levee guards fought to save standing dikes in the lower valley.

H. H. Krusekopf, University of Missouri soils professor, estimated 400,000 acres of bottom land between St. Louis and Kansas City were covered.

$5,000,000 Loss.

Capt. C. E. Walsh, district Army engineer, indicated this was conservative. He reported the "Big Muddy" had spread "from bluff to bluff," and was an average of 5 miles over the 100-mile stretch from Rockeport to Hermann, Mo.

Indications pointed to a probable Kansas flood loss of $5,000,000 or more.

By the Associated Press.

Lawrence, Kans., June 6.—Water which 1,000 men fought for two days to turn away lay quietly over North Lawrence tonight. Ample advance warning here had cheated the racing Kaw of human life.

In peaceful contrast to the days and nights during which men wrestled sandbags until they dropped exhausted on the embankment, sightseers today wandered along the Union Pacific Railroad bank to stare wonderingly across the vast lake which a few days ago was the home of 2,000 persons.

George Grossmith Dies; Actor and Playwright

London, June 6 (A.P.).—George Grossmith, English actor and playwright, died tonight. He was 61.

Grossmith was a frequent visitor to Broadway, both as actor and producer. He came to New York in 1913 in the role of Max Daly in "The Girl on the Film."

On his return to London he produced "Potash and Perlmutter." Coming once more to Broadway, the next year, he played the Hon. Dudley Mitten in "Tonight's the Night," which he produced with Edward Laurillard.

He made an American tour in 1904 and 1905 with Edna May, playing Sir Ormesby St. Leger in "The School Girl."

Weyerhaeuser Kidnapers Pass More Currency

Trail Turns Eastward With $20 Note Found in Spokane P. O.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., June 6.—Photographs of persons supposedly wanted for questioning were added tonight to the equipment of men trailing George Weyerhaeuser's kidnapers as indications loomed that the gang might have fled toward the East.

Sources close to the investigation intimated Jack Bailey, named by Portland police as one of six men wanted for questioning, had been or was being quizzed by Federal agents.

The meager trail of ransom bills pointed once more toward the East, with the appearance at Spokane of another $20 note from the $200,000 ransom fund.

The bill was passed at the money order window of the Spokane postoffice last Tuesday and discovered last night.

It was the second $20 bill to appear since the kidnapers received the ransom. The first was passed at Huntington, Oreg., last Sunday by a man purchasing a railroad ticket to Salt Lake City.

The Bailey investigation angle turned up after two men, identified as Federal agents, appeared at a Seattle hotel last night and removed a man from one of the rooms to an undisclosed destination.

Federal agents admitted they had pictures which were being carried about on investigation trips, but what suspects were among the group could not be learned.

It was indicated persons who believed they might have sighted the kidnap gang were being shown the photographs. The fact the pictures were available was taken to strengthen belief Federal authorities had definite suspects in mind.

Bailey, former bootlegger who once lived here, was one of six men named by Detective Capt. Keegan, of Portland, as being wanted for questioning.

Another of the six, Milo Eggers, former convict, said at Aberdeen he knew he had been investigated by Federal agents, but that none had talked to him. On the day of the kidnaping, May 24, Eggers said he was working in a cannery.

Besides Bailey and Eggers, the men named by Keegan as being sought are:

Elliott Michener, former convict and train robber; Richard Franseen, former convict and gunman; Lester Johnstone, alleged extortionist, and Harold McAtee, wanted also for questioning in a St. Louis (Mo.) slaying.

Federal authorities denied published reports that one of the 20,000 ransom notes had been found here Sunday or that they were on the trail of Vincent DeGrasse, former Capone gangster. They said they did not want him in the kidnaping.

The $20 Spokane ransom bill was received at the postoffice money order window Tuesday, but the clerk, Miss Vernor Beavers, could not recall who passed it.

Coldwater, Mich., June 6 (U.P.).—Michigan State police tonight awaited word from Tacoma authorities regarding the finding of a set of 1935 Washington licenses plates along route U. S. 112 near here today.

The plates, No. "101-416-X Washington," were found approximately 75 feet apart, and gave rise to belief that the kidnapers of George Weyerhaeuser, 9, were fleeing toward New York.

By the Associated Press.

Eagle Pass, Tex., June 6 (A.P.).—Police of Pedras Negras, Jimenez and Villa Acuna, Mexico, were cooperating today in a search for three small children believed by their parents to have been kidnaped from the Palestina farm community, near Villa Acuna, Sunday.

The children—Micaela, 9; Felipe, 6, and Jesus, 5—were last seen picking flowers near the highway, the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Isidro Acosta, reported.

Byng, Okla., Mourns Death of Lord Byng

Byng, Okla., June 6 (A.P.).—This Pontotoc County village heard with a personal feeling of regret today news of the death of Lord Byng.

While the town was being built, the news of Lord Byng's exciting World War drive within the German lines by means of tanks flashed over the wires. The builders named the town in his honor.

Rioters Combat Police as Laval Forms Cabinet

Support of Parliament to Save Franc Asked by New Premier.

litical parties to enable Laval to form a ministry capable of survival in the Chamber of Deputies.

Five hundred police battled rioters in the boulevards between the Place de l'Opera and the Boulevard de la Madelaine at 10 p. m.

Authorities broke up the demonstrations. The mob sang patriotic songs and shouted slogans against the party leaders.

Tax Protesters Massed.

Several thousand tax protesters gathered in the Latin Quarter, adding to the tension. Police said two planes flew over Paris last evening, dropping leaflets inviting the citizens to join in a huge tax protest. There is a law forbidding planes to fly over the capital.

One aviator was arrested by sky police when he landed at Orly Airdrome.

Police made no arrests because they feared to arouse the populace further.

War veterans, fearing government economies would include pension cuts, sent a delegation to Laval last night. He promised to name a war veteran minister of pensions.

The Radical-Socialists, holding the balance of power, agreed that Laval's policy should be "maintenance of the franc on its present gold parity, and crush speculation."

Francois Pietri, Corsican deputy to whom the president turned Wednesday night as premier, failed after a night and morning of fruitless negotiations with party leaders.

Lebrun then asked Fernand Bouisson, defeated in the chamber on his financial dictatorial demands, which defeated the Flandin ministry last Friday, to return to the thankless task. Bouisson rejected the offer.

When Pietri and Bouisson had failed him the president suggested Yvon Delbos, president of the Radical-Socialist Party, take the premiership, but Delbos declined. Laval was recalled to the palace.

Laval's first problem is to gain full support of the powerful Radical-Socialist bloc in the chamber, headed by Edouard Herriot. Their opposition overthrew the Flandin and Bouisson governments.

Danzig, June 6 (U.P.).—The Senate today amended Tuesday's decree which established an indefinite bank holiday and permitted banks to open week days from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. to receive deposits, and to pay out funds needed for wages, salaries and shipping.

Foreign transfers of funds, however, remained banned by the edict.

Damage Case Compromised At Westminster

Gelwicks of Emmitsburg Accept Settlement of $10,000 Suit.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., June 6.—A $10,000 suit in which Harry R. Gelwicks, of Emmitsburg, Frederick County, sought damages against the Lineboro Canning Co., for his daughter, Marie Frances, who was seriously injured, it was alleged, as the result of an automobile accident last August, was settled here yesterday.

A settlement was reached just as the case was about to be tried in the Carroll County Circuit Court. The amount of the settlement was not divulged.

A similar suit was also to have been tried in which Ethel M. Gelwicks sought $1,000 damages against the canning company.

Damages of 1 cent were awarded to Wilbur Hood, of near Smallwood, Carroll County, here yesterday, when a damage suit was tried before a circuit court jury. Hood sought $1,000 damages for alleged injury sustained last July, when he charged he was assaulted by Frank Jordan, of Gamber.

At the conclusion of court, Robert Stern, of Klees Mill, was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 on a charge of manufacturing intoxicating beverages without first procuring a license. Stern was first found guilty of the charge before former Magistrate George E. Benson, who sentenced him to two years in the Maryland House of Correction.

Stern entered an appeal and was later found guilty by a circuit court jury. Following the verdict, a motion for a new trial was made. The motion was denied by Judge William H. Forsythe, jr., yesterday. Stern was committed in default of the fine.

Rules for School Buses Proposed

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, June 6.—Walter N. Rudy, commissioner of motor vehicles, and Dr. Albert S. Cook, State superintendent of schools, conferred here today regarding special regulations to govern operation of school buses.

The meeting grew out of the recent tragedy at Rockville, where a bus-train collision killed 14 high school students from Williamsport.

Rudy recommended that school buses be required to come to a full stop at any grade crossing, and that they be painted a distinctive color with diagonal lines and, in large letters on their backs and sides, the words: "School Bus, Caution."

Leaders Split, Work Program At a Standstill

Ickes, Hopkins Deadlock; Backing PWA and CWA Job Theories.

By Felix Bruner.

Sharp differences of opinion over conduct of the $4,000,000,000 works program have developed within the Administration, it became apparent yesterday. Meanwhile, the whole program is virtually at a standstill.

The differences involve the question of whether the Administration shall go ahead with its announced intention of spending money only for useful public work, with the chance that far fewer than 3,500,000 people can be directly employed, or whether it shall drift into another CWA program, with the maximum number of people employed on "made" work.

While insisting that all discussion of the program must come from the office of Frank C. Walker, head of the Division of Applications and Information, Secretary Ickes declared yesterday that the question is a "simple matter of mathematics."

3,500,000 Jobs Impossible.

The mathematics involve the discovery of a fact that Ickes and the Public Work Administration have pointed out all along—that 3,500,000 people can not be put to work on useful public projects, and necessary materials purchased for $4,000,000,000.

The sharp differences between Ickes and Harry L. Hopkins, head of the progress division, over the manner in which people shall be put to work are coming into the open. The scheduled meeting of the allotment board was postponed yesterday. Since its first session, when it allotted more than $1,000,000,000, mostly for Federal projects, the board has done little except provide for direct relief and discuss policies.

It is even doubtful whether many of the projects for which the original allotments were made can be carried out. President Roosevelt has stuck to his plan to put 3,500,000 persons directly to work. From some quarters he has been urged to change this stand and to shoot at the mark of putting that number of people to work directly and indirectly, thus making expenditures for materials count toward the announced goal.

Only 2,000,000 Jobs in Sight.

The present plan for PWA projects is to make grants of 5 per cent of the cost of a project and to make a loan for the remainder or to require the local community to supply the remainder of the money. The Public Works Administration has compiled figures showing that 4,108 completed projects have cost approximately $2,000 per man per year. This includes the total cost. On this basis, if the Government should stand all the cost of similar projects under the works program only 2,000,000 persons could be put to work. The works program must be gauged so that the cost per man per year will not exceed $1,140, if 3,500,000 persons are employed.

Most of the allotments already made under the works program will reqire much higher expenditure than this. Some of them will cost as much as $3,000 per man. Road work, for instance, costs much more than $1,140. It was reported yesterday that consideration is being given to a plan to use both works funds and regular road appropriations in connection with road building.

The works money would be used for operations such as grading that would involve almost 100 per cent labor, and regular appropriations would be used for surfacing work in which there would be a high percentage of material cost.

Tugwell's Plans Held Up.

It was reported also that the rural resettlement work under Undersecretary Tugwell is being held up because land purchases would involve so much money that the average available to take people off relief rolls would be pulled down.

In connection with PWA projects the low wage scales prescribed by President Roosevelt would not apply. This would have a tendency to increase costs per man.

Secretary Ickes said that the necessity for keeping the average cost per man down will make future reclamation projects "very difficult." He said housing, which involves high material costs, would be regarded as "an exception to the rule."

Ickes always has insisted that the first requirement of any works project is that it be economically justifiable. He has held to the opinion that indirect work created by such projects is probably more important than work on the site.

Hopkins' View Favored.

Hopkins has held, and still is holding, to the view that the principal job of the Government is to put people directly to work. President Roosevelt apparently has been inclining to this view, although at the same time he has been insisting on useful projects. Ickes' attitude is that it is "a matter of mathematics" that the two things cannot be done.

Ickes is going along without a word of open criticism but tenseness of the situation is apparent. It has been intensified by the rule that all matters of information must come from the Walker organization. Already there have been clashes between the Walker publicity department and the PWA organization.

Ickes has a stock answer for all inquirers:

"Mr. Walker is charged with giving out all information."

92 Projects Proposed.

Hopkins is working on the theory that jobs must be fitted to the relief needs of communities. He and his organization are working now to devise such jobs. As it is estimated that not more than 30 per cent of persons on relief rolls are fitted for any type of construction work requiring skill or experience, this task is proving to be particularly difficult. That "boon doggling" and various types of "made" work, similar to that employed under the CWA will play a great part in the works program is becoming more likely daily.

One of the results of the present situation may be that the Government will be hesitant about making loans to municipalities, thus running up the Government's per-man costs, and that cities and States will be required to meet a large part of costs. This may make impossible a great many proposed projects.

The Public Works Administration has proposed 92 new projects in addition to those which had been examined and approved when the works program started. These projects would cost $67,000,000. None of them has been approved by the allotment board.

Meanwhile, two months after enactment of the law, no one has been taken off relief and put to work.

Wardman Tells Probers Debts Will Be Paid

Once Worth $30,000,000, He Says He Won't Go Into Bankruptcy.

Worth a cool $30,000,000 before the depression, Harry Wardman, outstanding builder, stood before a House committee yesterday with hands outstretched and cried he would not evade his debts.

The loquacious real estate man was questioned for the third time as a House sub-committee investigating Washington mortgage refinancing closed its hearings.

Chairman Sabath announced his group would meet soon in executive session to consider testimony heard here and maps plans for similar investigations in Detroit, St. Louis and other cities.

Silence fairly boomed in the crowded chamber as Wardman told of the collapse of his real estate empire and of his desire to repay his creditors.

Must Pay His Debts.

"The most important thing in life for me," he shouted, "is to pay my debts. I ought to go into bankruptcy, but I can't do it, and I won't unless I am forced into it."

In support of his desire to "get even with the world," Wardman testified he received a $90,000 income tax refund a year or two ago and applied it to his debts.

"No one questions your integrity," interposed Representative Culkin (Republican), New York.

Wardman thanked Culkin for his comment and went on to charge he rejected an offer of $1,000,000 for his interest in the companies bearing his name because the man who made it, Leonard L. Stanley, former vice president of Halsey, Stuart & Co., investment bankers, refused to—as Wardman expressed it—"pay off the bondholders" on the buildings involved in the financial difficulties.

Attacks Thomas Carson.

The witness made frequent verbal attacks on Thomas D. Carson, now president of the Wardman Co. Among other things, he said he attempted unsuccessfully to have Carson set a price on the properties, a statement denied later in the day by Carson.

"There is definitely a conspiracy to freeze out the Wardman bondholders and ultimately place control of the property in Halsey, Stuart & Co." Wardman charged.

Carson's management of the holdings was assailed vigorously by Wardman. The builder said he should be placed in charge himself.

Paul Lesh, lawyer identified with the banking interests during the litigation, described fees paid in the Wardman case as representing "an appalling total."

Russian Treasure Ship Is Located by Divers

Helsingfors, Finland, June 6 (A.P.).—Deep sea divers were reported today to have located the wreck of a Russian tax collecting ship said to have sunk in 1721 with 14 large barrels of gold in her hold.

The wreck was located near here, but the famous cargo remained a matter of conjecture. As the story has come down through the centuries, it should total at least $10,000,000, including jewelry, church clocks, silverware and art treasures said to have been obtained in a plundering expedition by the Russian fleet along the Swedish east coast.

14-Mile Ascent Seen For Stratosphere Pair

Rapid City, S. D., June 6 (A.P.).—Possibility that a new altitude record of 14 miles or more might result from the National Geographic Society-Army Air Corps stratosphere flight gave a new flip of adventure to the daring enterprise today.

Flight officials calculated Capt. Albert W. Stevens and Capt. Orvil A. Anderson should be lifted well above 70,000 feet, or 13¼ miles. Rain in the Rapid City territory today dimmed prospects of an immediate takeoff. Weather reports indicated little likelihood of better conditions tomorrow.

Opportunities Are Plentiful, Graduates Told

"World Yours," Randolph Tells Southeastern Seniors.

As 121 members of the law and accounting schools of Southeastern University were formally graduated in Memorial Continental Hall last night, 33-year-old Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, took issue with the idea that there are no more opportunities for youth.

Emphatically he denounced that idea. Instead, he exclaimed:

"The world is yours!"

In all countries—in Italy, in Germany and in Russia particularly—youth is being catered to and is taking positions of leadership, Randolph said. Even on Capitol Hill, he continued, older members of Congress have been taking the younger members by the hand, showing them every possible courtesy, helping them to important committee assignments.

Depression Called Aid.

"The depression, far from having destroyed opportunity for young men and young women, has had the effect of creating opportunities of such responsibility and magnitude as did not exist before," Randolph affirmed.

Opportunities are particularly notable, Randolph added, in banking, transportation, politics, education, religion. He said President Roosevelt, by his appointments of young men, had shown his faith in youth.

"This is obviously an age of organized, orderly reform," Randolph asserted.

He gave the graduates a list of specifications to be met by aspiring leaders. They must have, he said, faith, self-control, a keen sense of justice, definiteness of decision, definiteness of plan, the habit of doing more than paid for, a pleasing personality, sympathy, understanding, willingness to assume responsibility and co-operativeness.

Bell Confers Degrees.

The degrees were conferred by President James A. Bell as the graduates were introduced by Dean George W. Offutt, of the law school; William Roy Vallance, director of graduate work in law; Wayne Kendrick, associate dean of the school of accountancy, and Harvey T. Casbarian, director of graduate work in accountancy.

James P. Schick, president of the board of trustees, presided.

Honor keys were presented to John D. Larson, of the law school, with a general average of 94.85 per cent, and Robert Bartoo, of the school of accountancy, with 94.22 per cent. Anne Mosher won the Kappa Phi pin, with 94.8 per cent.

The list of graduates follows:

Trammell Gives 439 Diplomas at Annapolis While Under-Graduates Prepare for Cruise

10,000 Hear Senator Exhort New Ensigns to Copy Elders.

By Francis O. White, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., June 6.—Urging the young men to emulate the high ideals and standards of citizenship and patriotism, set by a long list of distinguished officers, Senator Park Trammell, of Florida, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, delivered the principal address and presented diplomas to a class of 439 midshipmen graduated from the United States Naval Academy at the eighty-ninth commencement ceremonies today.

An audience of some 10,000 persons, representing every State of the Union, and including parents, relatives, and friends and sweethearts of the graduates, as well as members of the three lower classes, attended the exercises which were held in massive Dahlgren Hall, commonly known as the armory.

The degree of bachelor of science was conferred upon all of the graduates, 315 of whom soon afterward became ensigns in the regular line, 26 accepted commissions as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps; 28 resigned for physical disqualification or other causes, and the status of 70 others is held in abeyance, pending reexaminations physically to be held at the academy on June 15. One of those who resigned is a native Filipino who will be commissioned in the Philippine constabulary.

Thirty Days' Vacation.

All of the graduates commissioned will be granted 30 days' leave before assignment to duty with ships of the fleet. Tonight members of he new senior and sophomore classes were preparing for embarkation early tomorrow on the battleships Wyoming and Arkansas, now riding at anchor in the bay, which will convey them on a summer practice cruise to northern European waters.

Second classmen will remain at the academy during a major portion of the summer for intensive instruction in aviation, and such practical work as engineering and navigation.

The Washington area and States in the immediate vicinity furnished a goodly number of the graduates. There were 23 appointees from the District, and Maryland and Virginia each were represented by 14. One of the District boys and two from Maryland were among the 33 "star" graduates—that is, they were graduated with distinction—having attained a multiple of 85 per cent or better for the four-year course. R. F. Dillen, jr., is the Washingtonian who ranked No. 19. J. H. McQuilkin, Baltimore, stood No. 5, and W. C. Abhau, Baltimore, was No. 24.

High-ranking service officials from Washington, including Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and Maj. Gen. John H. Russell, commandant of the Marine Corps, attended the exercises and occupied places on the official platform. Maryland was officially represented by Gov. Harry W. Nice, as was St. John's College by Col. Amos W. Woodcock, president. They, too, were seated on the dais.

Prayer Opens Ceremonies.

The ceremonies, simple and dignified, were opened with prayer by Lieut. David L. Quinn, assistant chaplain of the academy, after which Rear Admiral David F. Sellers, superintendent, spoke briefly in presenting Senator Trammell.

Admiral Sellers confined his remarks chiefly to praising the graduates for the manner in which they adhered to the trust and responsibility reposed in them since he took charge of affairs less than a year ago. He said his only regret is that he can not follow them in the great organization, the United States Fleet.

Senator Trammell prefaced his address by commending the staff of officers and civilian instructors, and referring to the academy as an "imposing institution, the definite expression of the American people who recognize the vital importance of an adequate national defense, as witnessed by the liberal and wise naval appropriations made by the present Congress."

In this respect he said, "we have also been most fortunate under the present Administration in having the encouraging and sympathetic support and friendly attitude of our beloved President, Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Touching upon national affairs, Senator Trammell said:

"Our national ideal is not a policy of aggression, nor does it embrace any design whatsoever for militaristic domination. For instance, throughout our history this Nation has never sought to gain additional territory nor has it used our national forces to procure indemnities from any nation.

"Our policy has ever been and is now that of preserving and protecting the rights of our own people.

Pledged Against Warfare.

"We believe in peace and believe in every honest effort to avert war. However, I am strongly of the opinion that a permanent peace is far more assured by a regular Navy and Army commensurate in strength and force to the importance of our country and the magnitude of the problems that confront our national life.

"There are those who would have us follow the passive policy of sitting supinely by, trusting to the beneficent and superlative generosity of the strong military nations where nationalism is rife. We would be impractical indeed were we to pursue such a national policy.

"Some of these people are sincerely actuated in this view for what they truly believe is for the best interest of our country, but there are others of this so-called pacificist group whose interest in our national defense program can not be accepted as anything more than a pretext for the furtherance of ulterior motives. Notable in this latter class will be found those who have more concern for the welfare of some other nation than our own who would change our system of government and destroy our American institutions and ideals.

"It is my opinion that these foes of our national naval policy have no appreciable strength. Triumphant over those who do not believe in preparedness for defense our specific plan of increasing our Navy to treaty strength moves forward with not only the support of those in authority, but with the backing of an overwhelming majority of the American people.

Citizens Feel Proud.

"Our citizens generally feel a sense of pride in the American Navy, they are proud of this academy which makes ready the men who are to become officers in our first line of defense."

Immediately after completing his address, Senator Trammell began distribution of diplomas. Names of the 33 who were graduated with distinction were called first, beginning with Lewis L. Schock, York, Pa., "honor man," and after that the coveted parchments were picked at random from a receptacle.

Demonstrations were prolonged for men who had been outstanding. This was particularly true in the case of Fred (Buzz) Borries, Louisville, Ky., all-America half back of the football team and all-round athlete for the last four years, who qualified only after a re-examination in English and history given him yesterday; John N. Shaffer, Bedford, Pa., regimental commander and also an athlete; the several company commanders and others.

The 439 midshipmen and their status as to commissions are listed below.

"Marine Corps" after a name indicates the graduate will be commissioned a second lieutenant in that branch of the service.

Those resigning upon graduation are so indicated.

Where "physical" follows a name it indicates that the midshipman received a diploma but commission as ensign is withheld pending a physical examination on June 15.

"Physical MC" indicates that the midshipman will receive a diploma and will be assigned to Marine Corps if physical examination is passed.

"Commission withheld" indicates the midshipman graduated but will be commissioned later in Marine Corps if a vacancy exists; otherwise in Navy.

Where not otherwise indicated the midshipman was graduated and commissioned an ensign in the Navy.

Grand Jury Quiz Asked In Divorce Trade Here

A grand jury investigation of the activities of Hubert J. Burrows was asked by Justice Jesse C. Adkins yesterday in the midst of a hearing on contempt of court charges against him. Burrows had been enjoined from practicing law in connection with a "Mexican divorce" business he allegdly maintained here.

Justice Adkins was hearing charges that Burrows had violated the injunction when he suddenly halted proceedings and suggested that all witnesses be sent before the District attorney to see if there was any possibility of a grand jury investigation. Attorney Jean M. Boardman, who began the proceedings against Burrows, charged him with disobeying the order of the District Supreme Court prohibiting him from practicing law in connection with Mexican divorces.

Wanderbirds to Try New Area In Hike on Northwest Branch

Several Swimming Holes Are Promised on Route of 8-Mile Jaunt.

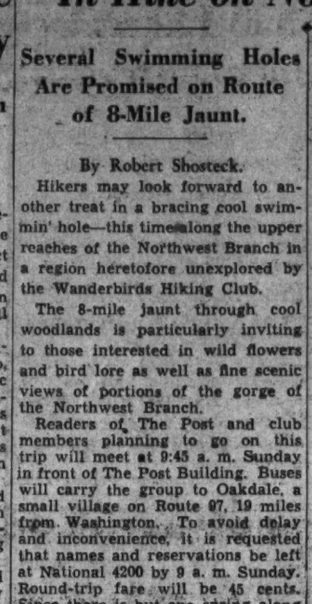
By Robert Shosteck.

Hikers may look forward to another treat in a bracing cool swimmin' hole—this time along the upper reaches of the Northwest Branch in a region heretofore unexplored by the Wanderbirds Hiking Club.

The 8-mile jaunt through cool woodlands is particularly inviting to those interested in wild flowers and bird lore as well as fine scenic views of portions of the gorge of the Northwest Branch.

Readers of The Post and club members planning to go on this trip will meet at 9:45 a. m. Sunday in front of The Post Building. Buses will carry the group to Oakdale, a small village on Route 97, 19 miles from Washington. To avoid delay and inconvenience, it is requested that names and reservations be left at National 4200 by 9 a. m. Sunday. Round-trip fare will be 45 cents. Since there is but one spring along the route, it is advisable to carry a canteen with water. Bring lunch and swim suit and dress lightly.

Starting from the old church at Oakdale, the hikers will follow a dirt road for half a mile to a tributary of the Northwest Branch



This brook enters the main stream about a mile down, passing through gently rolling meadows en route. The spring at which we can lunch is less than a quarter of a mile below a bridge on the road connecting Norbeck with the Colesville road.

After lunch and a short midday siesta, Dr. Stokes, hike leader, will give the signal for the second lap of our trip along a woodland trail on the west side of the branch. Most of the remaining 5 miles along this stream is heavily wooded, except for two stretches of meadow land. The trail is easy and open practically the entire distance.

The only trace of the Old Northwest Mill is the mill race ruins, which extend for nearly a mile along the east bank to the Colesville road. Dr. Stokes was unable to find any trace of the mill foundation but believes that a systematic search should reveal this historic ruin which served the area when Washington was young.

There are several quiet places along the Northwest Branch where the water is sufficiently deep to afford good swimming. Hikers should be on the lookout for a suitable swim hole. Buses will pick up the group at the Northwest Mill Bridge and should reach the city by 6:30 p. m.

The Potomac Appalachian Trails Club plans a 12 to 15 mile trip Sunday in the Blue Ridge from Jeremiah Run to Piney Branch via the Rangeville shelter. This is the newest side trail system developed by the club and is exceptionally scenic with many waterfalls and deep ravines. Those interested in P. A. T. C. hikes should communicate with the club at 609 American Security Building.

Rex Bliss, a naturalist and scout, who hails from Toronto, was so impressed by last Sunday's Wanderbird trip that he plans to start a similar group when he returns home next week and hopes to be able to induce the editor of his home-town paper to sponsor such a group . . . Louis Siegel, a hiker-astronomer, who recently joined the ranks of the Wanderbirds, is interested in starting a star and planet study group to meet on week nights on the Mall. Watch The Post for announcements of the first meeting of this group . . . A well-illustrated handbook, "Forest Trees of the District of Columbia," is now available to hikers and naturalists at 20 cents a copy. Get your copy on Wanderbird hikes or write to the club, care of The Post . . . Watch Sunday's Post for a timely and instructive article on woodland pests and how to avoid them. Tells how to prevent and cure ivy poisoning, chigger and insect bites, snake bite and nettle rash, and how to keep off ticks.

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Cummings yesterday said the Government will resist the damage suits of ten air lines amounting to $10,314,087, which resulted from the annulment of air-mail contracts by Postmaster General Farley.

"The airlines have until June 12 to file the suits in the Court of Claims and then we have 40 days to answer," the Attorney General said.

"I imagine there will be a large group of Government lawyers assigned to the cases," he added.

Labor Rejects New NRA; Maps One of Its Own

Workers Urged to Resist Pay Cuts, Long Hours 'at All Costs.'

Refusing to accept President Roosevelt's NRA program, the American Federation of Labor yesterday began consideration of new NRA legislation which it expects to have introduced in Congress within a few days.

At the same time, the executive council of the federation issued a militant call to all workers to "resist at all costs" attempts which may be made "to lower wages, increase hours of labor and to impose upon them the onerous conditions" which prevailed prior to enactment of NRA.

William Green, federation president, said this meant strikes if wage cutting and hour lengthening could be prevented in no other way.

1,000,000 Already Affected.

A survey by the federation indicated that at least 1,000,000 wage earners had been affected by cutting of wages and lengthening of hours since the Supreme Court decision.

The executive council met in special session to consider effects of the NRA decision and to map a program. It listed five measures it considers "must" legislation, as follows:

Enactment of a new law to replace the national recovery act.

Passage of the Wagner-Connery labor disputes bill.

Enactment of the Black-Connery 30-hour-week bill.

Passage of social security legislation.

Enactment of the Guffey coal bill.

To Include Licensing.

Resident members of the executive council will go to work immediately with Green in drafting the federation's proposed new NRA. The bill is expected to include a provision for licensing, through Federal incorporation, of businesses in interstate commerce.

Senator Wagner, author of the labor disputes bill, sat in with the council for nearly an hour. Green said he did not know whether Wagner would introduce the new bill.

The council's statement declared that the NRA decision had caused the Nation to revert "to the economic policies and practices which prevailed in 1930, 1931 and 1932, when between 13,000,000 and 14,000,000 were unemployed."

"With section 7(a) abolished, the workers will be compelled to fight as never before for the exercise of their right to organize into independent trade unions of their own choosing," the statement said. "The executive council deems it necessary to remind the workers of the Nation that, after all, their economic, industrial and social salvation lies in their own economic strength and united solidarity."

New NRA "Surrender."

Calling the Supreme Court decision a "most damaging blow," the council continued.

"For this reason it is the judgment of the executive council that immediate, prompt and vigorous action be taken. The damage caused by the Supreme Court's decision should be repaired immediately through the enactment of a new act to replace the national recovery act. We would regard the adoption of the Senate resolution extending the skeleton of the national recovery act and the abandonment of its administrative machinery as a surrender to the opponents of national recovery and of national recovery legislation.

"Labor refuses to assume a defeatist attitude. It will not surrender."

Retail Trade Worst.

In addition to new legislation, the federation advocated adoption of a constitutional amendment "to suit the needs of present day economic and social conditions." It declared that it is more important that the people seek and find a solution to economic and social problems than it is to maintain an organic law.

The council instructed executives of the federation to make a study of the constitutional amendment proposal and to report at the next council meeting August 5.

Debt Holiday Extension Sought by Reichsbank

Berlin, June 6 (U.P.).—Reichsbank officials have approached their long and middle term foreign creditors and proposed extension of the one-year moratorium on such debts, it was learned today. The moratorium was due to expire June 30, 1935.

Individual agreements, which Germany has arranged with some of her creditors, including Switzerland, France and Great Britain, also would be extended by the proposals, it was reported reliably.

Labor Spurns Roosevelt NRA; House Set to Vote Extension

May Move to Recommit.

Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, last night was considering a motion to recommit the resolution after it is called up in the House today. He wants no extension beyond June 16, until the Federal Trade Commission has had an opportunity to explore the feasibility of voluntary agreements set up by trade and industry.

Leaders claimed votes to spare, however, and there appeared every likelihood that the resolution will be overwhelmingly adopted within the two-hour limit.

The 91-word measure, revising the Clark NRA resolution which already has passed the Senate, follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 (c) of Title I of the national industrial recovery act is amended by striking out "at the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof "on April 1, 1936."

Code Powers Repealed.

"Section 2. All the provisions of Title I of such act delegating power to the President to approve or prescribe codes of fair competition, and providing for the enforcement of such codes, are hereby repealed."

Meantime, Government experts continued their study of ways and means of keeping the Blue Eagle aloft. In a letter to State Senator Henry J. Parkman, jr., of Massachusetts, President Roosevelt said he had ordered a special survey of interstate compacts as a means of preserving labor standards.

About the Capitol spread reports that Mr. Roosevelt will send a message to Congress advocating inheritance taxes as one means of continuing NRA wealth-distributing objectives. Appeals went out from industrial executives and financiers for voluntary business adherence to general Blue Eagle principles.

AAA Row Continues.

Throughout the day, the struggle went on to conform basic New Deal measures to constitutional standards laid down by the Supreme Court.

The House Agriculture Committee labored late over drastic changes in the AAA amendments, eliminating licensing features and writing new constitutional safeguards into the law. Only one major change was agreed to. The committee rephrased the bill's processing tax authorization to provide for direct congressional appropriation of the sums raised by the taxes. Members felt this cleared up some doubt as to validity of the existing provision for the AAA to levy and use of processing tax proceeds.

Compact Study Promised.

President Roosevelt's letter to State Senator Parkman on interstate compact possibilities read:

"My Dear Senator Parkman—I am glad to receive the memoranda and resolutions that you have so kindly sent me from the Interstate Conference on Labor Compacts.

"I have for some time followed with great interest the work which the conference has been doing. There is no doubt that continued efforts in every State to improve and safeguard labor standards is of definite value.

"I am directing that a study be made of the proposals made in your resolutions and that I shall be kept in touch with any further work of the conference.

"Very truly yours,
"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

Gay Urges NRA Spirit.

The conference had sought Federal protection for States entering such compacts and Senator Parkman had written the President of the conference action.

Charles R. Gay, president of the New York Stock Exchange, meanwhile added his voice to the chorus of expressions from business leaders, striking a cooperative note in the movement to maintain NRA standards.

Addressing the New York Chamber of Commerce, Gay said:

"Let us not forget that this is a new day, and that it behooves us to apprehend its spirit. High standards of commercial honor and integrity, just and equitable principles of trade, fair and frank treatment of labor, the recognition of our social trusteeship—these ideals we must endow with a new reality."

Richberg Explains Details.

House Ways and Means Committee action on the Administration's NRA extension resolution followed a 3½-hour session, with the committee closeted most of the time with Richberg who explained in detail the work outlined for the lingering NRA organization.

After hearing from Richberg, the committee crushed an amendment by Representative Thomas A. Jenkins (Republican), Ohio, to repeal all authorization for a continuing agency and its employes.

In the end, two Republicans, Representatives Harold Knutson, of Minnesota and Frank Crowther, of New York, voted with Democratic members to approve the resolution. The five Republicans voting "present" were Representatives Treadway, Bacharach, of New York; Reed, of New York; Woodruff, of Michigan, and Jenkins.

Vinson Leads Defense.

Adjourning at once to the Rules Committee room, Chairman Doughton and majority members of his group faced a barrage of questions:

"What's left of the NRA?"

"Do you leave in language suspending the antitrust laws?"

"Can industries still fix prices?"

Representative Harry C. Ransley (Republican), Pennsylvania, naively inquired "Why All Fools Day was suggested as the day on which NRA would finally expire."

Representatives Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, and Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky (Democrats), joined Doughton in defendinf the committee's action.

Vinson said that as he viewed it, the Administration in the recovery act was given three means of carrying out its Blue Eagle program—licenses, codes, voluntary business agreements.

Voluntary Pacts Remain.

Licensing powers, he explained, expired last year and codes were invalidated by the Supreme Court. In extending NRA to next April 1, he said the committee had left only voluntary business agreements.

Hill said it was still possible under these agreements for business to get together for the purpose of fixing prices, so long as monopolistic practices were strictly avoided.

The brief hearing over, newspapermen were banished from the room as the committee proceeded to a vote.

Earlier in the day both Ways and Means and Rules Committees had received House permission to file their reports before midnight, meeting requirements that reported measures lie over a day before House consideration. Speaker Byrns summoned the House into session an hour earlier today to dispatch the NRA program.

Mortgage Men Are Expecting Business Boom

pressure on the reservoirs of real estate credit, resulting from the low interest rates prevailing generally throughout the money market and the huge amount of idle funds.

Concerns Seek Use for Money.

Insurance companies, for instance, finding the yield from investments in securities dwindling, recently have taken a more favorable attitude toward refinancing mortgages and lending on real estate.

Institutions, such as building and loan associations, which have had their funds swollen by increased deposits as the banks reduced interest on savings accounts, feel the need to get their money at work and thus earn a return. They are now soliciting borrowers for long-term loans.

Financial institutions generally, where the law permits, are taking a more favorable attitude toward the long-term amortized type of residential mortgage, it is reported. This is due in large part to the Government insurance of such loans and also to the assurance of liquidity offered by the discounting privileges of the Home Loan banks.

Supreme Court Aids Credit.

According to those closely associated with mortgage financing, the Supreme Court, when it declared unconstitutional the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act, removed an important obstacle to the freer flow of residential mortgage loans. Had that act been declared valid, the fear of subsequent legislation would have created a risk which many institutions would have been slow to accept, it is argued.

Mortgage finance circles still are troubled over recurring agitation for a huge Government program of so-called low-cost or—more properly described—subsidized housing. Such a program, carried out on a broad scale, would affect existing real estate values, it is contended.

Such a plan is the Wagner bill providing $800,000,000 for a Government housing program. This bill was indorsed yesterday by a number of witnesses, including Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York, at a hearing of a Senate Labor sub-committee.

Liberalization of Bill Sought.

Secretary Ickes indorsed the bill "in principle" and urged greater administrative authority in the measure. He said a provision limiting to 30 per cent the amount of Federal grant in slum clearance projects should be liberalized. Mayor LaGuardia said greater authority should be given to local housing authorities in spending the Federal money.

John H. Fahey, chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board, last night in a radio address explained the functions and objectives of the four agencies which his board supervises—the HOLC, the Home Loan Bank system, the Federal Savings and Loan associations and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

He declared that the act of Congress, signed last week by the President, increasing the funds of the HOLC by $1,500,000,000, "should have far-reaching value if the people take advantage of it," adding that it will "assist not only the now relatively small number of urban home owners who are in danger of foreclosure, but also the great multitude of families who are not in distress."

He pointed out that one of the long-range objectives of his board was to enable American families "to finance or refinance the ownership of their dwellings at lower cost, through an improved type of long-term mortgage loan from private lenders which can be paid off conveniently over a period of years."

Dead NRA Still Preys On Cumming's Mind

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Cummings inadvertently revealed yesterday that the National Recovery Administration has a prominent place in his thoughts.

Informing reporters of a radio speech on the proposed National Crime Institute he will make at Stamford, Conn., tonight at 9:30 o'clock, Eastern standard time, Cummings said:

"It will be broadcast over the NRA network."

A howl of laughter brought the correct initials, "NBC."

Frank Declares 'Higher' Power Will Rule U. S.

Nature of Social Control Will Make or Break Future, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 6.—Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, addressing the General Federation of Women's Clubs here today, asserted that while "some measure of social control of private enterprise has become imperative," he believed "democracy, in the long run is both safer and superior to dictatorship."

"It is one of the major delusions of this disintegrate time," he said, "that the need of the hour is strong government. It is not strong government we need so much as wise government, government invested with the virtues of insight, dignity, moderation, justice, tolerance and an acute sense of social values."

Earlier in today's session the delegates had heard appeals to the women of the country to take a more active part in its economic welfare, voiced by speakers who reflected divergent views of the NRA invalidation by the Supreme Court.

Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, described the invalidation of NRA as a blessing. This view was opposed by Blackwell Smith, acting general counsel of the NRA, who said "it is the approach to administration which must be changed."

James A. Wilson, representing the American Federation of Labor, told the convention that the status of child labor is a matter of concern to the women of the land, adding that since the Supreme Court's NRA decision "God alone knows what will happen to the future of child labor."

Dr. Frank in his address asserted that "the destiny of democracy on this continent will depend entirely on our success or failure in solving the present economic problem. * * * For all our brave whistling in the dark, we are still far from out of the woods. * * * Democracy has died before in history."

"We have reached a point in our economic evoluti onat which some force above the battle of private interests, whether it be the force of organized industry itself or the power of the state, must insure the adoption, throughout our business and industrial system, of minimum policies respecting wages, hours, prices and profits that will bring our capacity to purchase into such relation to our capacity to produce as will keep our industrial system a going concern."

The nature of such control is debatable, Dr. Frank said, but it is the determining of the nature of this social control that will make or break the national future.

Free State Is Divided On King's Anniversary

Dublin, Irish Free State, June 6 (U.P.).—Characteristic division of opinion among the Irish marked the Free State's first popular recognition of King George's silver jubilee celebrations.

Those who oppose British rule bought shillelaghs—the Irishman's favorite weapon—being sold in stores here, with the words "God save the King—damn him!" or "Up with De Valera!" painted on the knobby end of the stout cudgels.

However, as a token of good will three Irish silver dish rings have been presented to the King as a gift from the Irish people.

Shriner Chants To Ring in City Starting Sunday

ditioned cars, dining service, shower baths, fire and police protection, postoffice conveniences and bars.

About 200 of the Pullman-hotel cars will be "parked" at the New York avenue, Water street and New Jersey avenue yards, Mr. Coleman declared. Altogether 10,000 Shriners are expected to come here by rail, about 15 per cent of whom will make their convention homes in the cars.

Preparations for the gala conclave proceeded yesterday to crescendo on dozens of fronts. There was a noticeable spurt in the sale of tickets for the pageant and two parades, the tented city in the Monument Grounds, where the 346th Infantry, of Fort George G. Meade, will be encamped, neared completion, finishing touches were begun on the Pennsylvania avenue decorations, and scores of separate rehearsals for the various parade features were held.

Tickets went on sale yesterday for the first time at Julius Garfinckel & Co. department store. They are obtainable also at Almas Temple headquarters, the Willard Hotel, the Potomac Electric Power Co., People's Drug Stores and elsewhere.

All resources of the A. A. A. District of Columbia Motor Club have been placed at the disposal of Robert P. Smith, director general of the convention, said an announcement by the American Automobile Association. Outdoor telephone service in East Potomac Park, similar to that in use during cherry blossom time, will be installed if motor traffic is thick enough, it was stated.

The 350 automobiles which have been lent to the convention committee by General Motors Corporation will be provided temporary A. A. A. memberships. The official car of Dan S. Williams, imperial potentate of the Shrine, was presented to him yesterday at Almas Temple.

First-aid protection is assured marchers and spectators alike, it was announced yesterday by District of Columbia Chapter, American Red Cross. Ten stations, most of them equipped with telephones, will be in service Tuesday morning and Wednesday and Thursday nights.

Three will be equipped as medical rest stations, each in charge of a senior physician. They are to be located at the start of the parade route, which is the intersection of Pennsylvania and Constitution avenues, Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue and Nineteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

Personnel will be drawn from the Army Medical Corps, as well as the Red Cross, and Boy Scouts will serve as messengers.

At 10 a. m. today the first official event of the convention program will begin when W. Freeland Kendrick, past imperial potentate, calls to order the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the Shrine Hospitals for Crippled Children. The earlier announcement that the session would convene yesterday was erroneous.

The trustees, who will gather at the Willard Hotel, will discuss finances of 15 crippled children's hospitals in the United States and Canada endowed by the fraternal order. They will report to Imperial Potentate Williams when the imperial council convenes next week.

Miss Gilroy was returning home from the school when the accident occurred.

Grass is being held pending the outcome of Miss Gilroy's condition. The teacher was taken to Sibley Hospital by the Bladensburg rescue squad. She suffered a skull injury and internal injuries.

Japan Triples Its Armed Force In North China

the tension somewhat, but troop movements kept the populace disturbed.

An official Japanese communique announced that the Japanese military commanders in North China would meet tomorrow (Saturday) to devise steps to be taken in consequence of "unsatisfactory" replies from Gen. Ho Ying-Ching, Chinese military commander in the North China area, regarding bandit assassinations. Gen. Ho was the personal representative in Peiping of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek.

Foreigners Comforted.

Col. Takashi Sakai, chief of staff here, assured the foreign population, including Americans, that they "need have no fear they will suffer if Tientsin and Peiping are added to the demilitarized zone."

"Business will continue as usual," Col. Sakai told the United Press. "In fact, business will improve when we rid Peiping and Tientsin of Chinese soldiers."

Despite his assurances, however, foreign business men in Tientsin were extremely apprehensive. The Tientsin branch of Arnhold & Co., one of the largest merchandizers in North China, announced they were moving out.

The crisis has grown out of Japan's demands in the last ten days that the Chinese cease alleged anti-Japanese activities and terrorist acts. Otherwise, they threaten to effect this end by force.

Situation Watched Closely by U. S.

By the United Press.

As State Department officials last night followed Japanese military activities in north China with undisguised anxiety, Col. Kenji Matsumoto, military attache of the Japanese Embassy, deprecated fears of an armed occupation of Peiping and Tientsin.

Dr. Alfred Sze, Chinese Minister, as yet has received no official reports from his government as to the significance of Japanese military movements inside the Great Wall of China.

State Department officials have not decided what action the United States would take in event of an actual Japanese armed occupation of key cities in north China. But it was indicated vigorous protests would result from such an eventuality in concert with Great Britain, whose subjects have heavy financial interests north of the Yellow River.

Attorneys Push Measure for New Judgeship.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, June 6 (AP).—With the bill for a second Federal judgeship for eastern Virginia now safely past the House of Representatives, a delegation of Richmond attorneys will confer with Senators Glass and Byrd in Washington next week to ask their support of the measure when it reaches the Senate.

The matter was discussed with Glass in Washington yesterday and other details will be considered at the second conference in which Senator Byrd will sit.

Attorneys in the eastern district said the load is too heavy for one judge.

Chicken Thief's Killing to Bring Light Sentence

Imposing of Penalty on Harriston Farmer Is Deferred.

By the Associated Press.

Staunton, Va., June 6.—Robert Jenkins, 42-year-old Harriston Negro who rigged up the shotgun in his henhouse that shot and killed John Henry Jackson last March, will be dealt with leniently, the court said today in deferring sentence until July 1.

Jackson, who had a reputation as a chicken thief, was killed when he attempted to enter the henhouse.

Judge Joseph A. Glasgow, although asserting he could not approve of the practice of "styling" guns, in consideration of the defendant's World War record and the esteem in which he was held in the community, said he would deal leniently with him.

He found the defendant guilty of involuntary manslaughter and announced the imposition of sentence would be deferred until Jenkins had completed seasonal work on his small farm.

Commonwealth's Attorney John D. White recommended a 60-day jail sentence. Pending the imposition of sentence the Negro is free under $2,000 bond.

Washington's Waterfront

Within the memory of many Washingtonians, not necessarily the oldest inhabitants, the Potomac River was an important artery of commerce. If the bill approved by the Senate Commerce Committee is enacted, this historic stream may once more resume, in some degree, its former function.

Below Washington the Potomac has been dredged to a depth of 24 feet for 110 miles. But the Georgetown, Anacostia River and Washington channels are only 20 feet deep. At an estimated cost of $325,000 it is proposed to extend the deeper channel so that the Capital City may obtain the full benefit of the lower Potomac project. Larger boats will then be able to reach Washington, with a considerable saving in the transportation costs of various commodities.

No one anticipates that Washington will ever become a major port. But it is entirely proper that advantages already made available to towns farther down the river, and to hundreds of cities on other streams, should be extended to the Capital City. The cost of living here is relatively high. If it can be fractionally reduced, without injury to the railroads, the funds for deepening Washington's channels and for harbor improvements would seem a good investment from the standpoint of the community.

To provide facilities for increased water traffic the bill provides $1,650,000 for replacement of the ramshackle docks and piers along the Washington Channel waterfront. Support for this project comes also from groups interested in pleasure boating and beautification of the harbor area. The proposed yacht harbor would berth 286 boats. Since the Government expects to obtain about $36,500 annually in revenue from the rental of piers and yacht basins, it does not appear that shippers or aquatic sportsmen would be unduly favored.

Revenue thus raised would go directly into the Treasury. It goes without saying, therefore, that the Government should finance the project, except the police and fire wharf especially designed for use of District agencies. All of the waterfront in question is owned by the Government. It would be ironical if the District should be required, as provided in the House bill, to pay half the cost of improving Federal property from which all the return would go into the Federal Treasury. The most desirable projects become questionable if they involve such an unreasonable division of costs.

A Soldier Passes.

It was a commonplace in British army circles that "what Byng does not know about modern soldiering is not worth knowing." Now Lord Byng, Viscount of Vimy, is dead. The man who led the Canadians through snow and rain to take Vimy Ridge and later conceived the plan for a surprise attack with tanks on the Cambrai front succumbed yesterday in his seventy-second year. England loses a great hero.

But let it not be thought that the old field marshal knew only of military affairs. Not longer ago than April, while he was returning from California, he met a group of newspapermen in Washington. "What about the next war?" they chorused. "Nobody wants war," the old gentleman who had devoted his entire life to the army answered. "Nobody wants war, but things don't look too promising at the moment. I have the idea that the more we talk about war, the more likely we are to have it." His understanding went far beyond mere soldiering.

Love In Any Other Language.

Apparently the Soviets feel that Romeo and Juliet are to be taken seriously, but not too seriously. At least that is the opinion of a Moscow correspondent as revealed in a copyright story to the New York Herald Tribune. Unlike the profit motive, young love has a definite place in the Russian sun, but not to the exclusion of everything else. After all, there are subways to be built, fields to be plowed and new air records to be set. True love, it is believed in Russia, is practical love. Therefore, this Shakespearean romance, which is the first classical drama ever to be produced in Moscow's Theater of the Revolution, is presented with a pinch of salt interspersing the sugary sentiments of the Bard.

Many and varied have been the speculations as to what would have happened if Romeo and Juliet had lived to a ripe old age. Would they have celebrated a golden wedding or would their in-laws on both sides have made them decide to call it a day long before that? It is generally conceded that their early deaths precluded any conclusions that might have been reached on that point.

However, the Young Communist League, assisting in the play's presentation, felt it safe to assume that love's young dream would never have a rude awakening as long as the party of the first part and the party of the second part were as sincere as Romeo and Juliet. The director hoped thereby to point a moral to his audience of shock-workers, who have adapted with entirely too much alacrity the quick-divorce system of the Soviet regime. This is probably the first time in history that Romeo and Juliet have been held up as hearth-and-fireside examples with an expectation of thus encouraging the return of the family unit. It is indeed a radical departure when the "bourgeois" Shakespeare is summoned to aid in the taming of the Soviet.

Widely Diverging Policies.

While the Blue Eagle is being reduced to a skeleton, the AAA is sprouting a brilliant new coat of feathers. Secretary Wallace quickly noted that the whole processing tax structure—which is the backbone of the agricultural adjustment act—rests upon a delegation of powers no less flimsy than that which supported the so-called recovery act. Instead of abandoning the elaborate farm experiment, however, he has hastily revised the pending AAA amendments "into line with the Schechter case decision."

This reaction to the momentous Supreme Court opinion stands out in sharp contrast to the virtual abandonment of NRA. If the Federal Government can regulate agriculture, which is almost entirely intrastate in character, it is rather arbitrary for the President to assume that modified industrial control to preserve the advantages of the code system would be found unconstitutional. Under Mr. Wallace's plan, which the President has approved, the AAA is not only to be continued but in some cases to be strengthened and extended. Can it be that this difference of attitude springs from the popularity of the AAA among farmers and the waning of enthusiasm for the NRA?

The agricultural program has reached a point where some modifications appear to be imperative if the United States is to hold its foreign markets for surplus crops. Especially in the cotton trade the situation is considered desperate by some observers. But the AAA intends to press forward with its curtailment scheme by having the processing taxes enacted into law. At present the Secretary of Agriculture is free to apply these levies in accord with changing conditions. Fearing that such a broad grant of authority might be found unconstitutional, Mr. Wallace would substantially restrict it. Under the new plan, however, his power to make the sweeping adjustments that appear necessary may be largely eliminated.

It is important, of course, to bring this and all other New Deal agencies into line with the fundamental law. But the most vital question concerning the farm experiment relates to its economic soundness rather than its constitutionality. There are many indications (foremost of which are the export figures for cotton) that the AAA is creating economic problems in some cases more serious than those it is attempting to solve. But the AAA insists on pursuing its experiment. Instead of modifying the artificial controls which are undermining foreign markets for American farm products, it now proposes to inaugurate a system of export bounties to stimulate foreign buying. A new expedient would be used to patch up the ragged edges of the old one.

Payment of export bounties is always a direct challenge to other countries to adopt similar methods. Where the bounties offer new competition to producers in other countries new barriers to trade are likely to be erected. Thus the whole procedure of creating artificial prices on export commodities and trying to maintain those prices by artificial means tends to defeat the original purpose of aiding the farmer. It is strange indeed that the Administration would hasten to bolster up the law behind this questionable policy while making no concerted effort to mitigate possible disorder in the retreat from industrial control.

A Question Of Consistency.

Few decisions of the Supreme Court in recent years have aroused more legal confusion than that by which the telephone rates prescribed by the Maryland Public Service Commission were this week upset. Majority and minority opinions (it was a 6-to-3 decision) followed very different lines of reasoning, each of which is convincing from its own point of view.

The decision is especially significant because it involves the functions of the court itself. It has informed Maryland's P. S. C. that it can not fix rates by arbitrary methods even though the rates so established may not result in confiscation of utility property under present conditions. The court seems to have gone out of its way to prevent the price-index method of determining utility rates from becoming a precedent. In other words, it has taken upon itself the responsibility of precluding faulty procedure on the part of local rate-making bodies as well as the obligation of protecting property values against confiscation.

The Maryland commission ordered a telephone rate reduction after revaluing the company's property in accord with a formula based on 16 price indices. Recent experience substantiates the majority contention that the adjustment of the value of utility properties to sudden price fluctuations would be "not only unfair, but impractical." Rates could not possibly be changed with every variation in commodity prices. Consequently, the court refused to sanction this short-cut solution of the valuation enigma.

On the contrary, the minority remained aloof from questions of procedure. "It is not within the province of the Federal courts," Justice Stone wrote, with the concurrence of Justices Brandeis and Cardozo, "to prescribe rates or to revise rates fixed by State authority, unless property is taken without due process in violation of the fourteenth amendment." In the opinion of the minority the rates fixed by the price-index formula were not confiscatory. Hence, they insist, the court should not have inquired into any other aspect of the case.

From a strict juridical viewpoint the conclusion of the minority appears to be unassailable. In practice, however, the Supreme Court exercises a much broader function than the settlement of controversial cases appealed from lower jurisdictions. Its position as the interpreter of the Constitution for all the courts of the land is firmly established. If the court had upheld rates based on what it considers an unfair and impractical method of valuation, widespread adoption of this faulty procedure might have been the result. As a practical matter, therefore, the court went beyond the immediate issue of confiscation and laid down a rule which may be expected to guide utility commissions throughout the country. Its purpose seems to have been to prevent the establishment of unfair rate schedules instead of invalidating them after they have resulted in unconstitutional encroachments upon property rights.

But it remains questionable how far the court should go in pursuit of this policy. The Schechter case emphasized the constitutional limitation of Federal powers as contrasted with those of the States. There seems a certain inconsistency in this immediately subsequent emphasis on the limitation of a State's regulatory powers.

A Political Kaleidoscope.

Within a week two French Cabinets have fallen, Pierre Laval has tried to form a successor government and failed and Francois Pietri has abandoned a futile effort to effect a workable coalition.

This recital of swiftly formed and quickly overthrown governments is an oft-told tale of which Frenchmen have grown weary, although the events of the past few days have been more than ordinarily kaleidoscopic. The three-day Bouisson ministry was the ninth one which has been formed since the present Parliament was elected three years ago, and, in view of the acute nature of the crisis which confronts the country, the next government will probably not survive long, unless it is accorded unusual powers to carry out reform measures.

Under the most favorable conditions, the life of a French ministry is highly precarious because it can stay in power only so long as it commands a majority in the legislature. As numerous parties, ranging from those on the extreme right to those on the extreme left, are represented in Parliament, it is, moreover, necessary to form a coalition cabinet representing various party groups in order to be assured of legislative support. That means, of course, endless conferences and compromises preliminary to the selection of a cabinet that can be counted upon to work in harness and carry with it enough votes to enable the Government to put through its program.

At the present time, the extreme difficulty of the task is emphasized not only by the succession of abortive attempts to form a government but by the marked reluctance of the country's political leaders to take the initiative. The President of the Senate, Jules Jeanneney, and Edouard Herriot both refused to try, and Laval twice declined before embarking upon his unsuccessful effort. To save the franc a program of highly unpopular budgetary retrenchment is essential. Consequently, the governments that have just fallen asked for extensive powers to legislate by decree. That request of course increased the obstacles to speedy solution of the political impasse.

This latest evidence of the impotence of the French multi-party system in a crisis has again resulted in street demonstrations apparently reminiscent of those which assumed such threatening proportions last year after a series of ministries had been overthrown without succeeding in balancing the budget. More than the fate of the franc may hang upon the ability of France's political leaders to put an end to this demoralizing political stalemate. Commenting upon the disorders last year following the Stavisky scandals, Edouard Herriot said: "If they are to hold their own, our democracies have a great effort to make. If legislatures are not far-sighted enough to discipline themselves, if they refuse to bow to the exigencies of the times, dictatorship will triumph."

The problem that now confronts France is how to eliminate the partisan strife that prevents decisive legislative action, without sacrificing those fundamental safeguards of representative government which lovers of freedom everywhere value above the most brilliant material accomplishments of dictatorial rule.

Trading Clothes.

From the Kansas City Times.

Another thing we never expected to live to see, but have, is the process of trading clothes now going on between the Democratic and Republican Parties.

The Democrats for more than a century have been wearing the Jeffersonian garments of State rights and distrust of centralized power at Washington. The Republicans have paraded in the Hamiltonian clothing of nationalism.

Now the Democrats are putting on the coat of national control of industry and the trousers of a great central bank dominated by Washington, while the Republicans are struggling with the discarded Jeffersonian outfit of State control and decentralized authority. What a swap!

Control Of Rent.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The congressional committee that investigated rents in the District showed little or no knowledge of local or national conditions.

Many properties here in the past few years were rented for less than a fair rental. Tenants were then very dictatorial. Congress took no action to make tenants pay an equitable amount so that many owners might have avoided foreclosure. If the newcomers in the city are imbued with the idea that a rent law will decrease rents, they are reminded that the last one did not—rents were higher then than at any time. In the main, it only gave the undesirable tenant an opportunity to beat the owner out of additional rent, for the owner was unable to dispossess within a reasonable time.

Comparing local rents with other localities is stupid without taking into consideration the costs of ground and construction and prevailing wages. Internal revenue figures indicate that the District of Columbia led the whole Nation with 14.9 per cent of its population filing income tax returns, with an average for the country of 3.10 per cent, with New York State the nearest competitor, with only 6.21 per cent.

When Congress passed legislation abolishing alley dwellings, no provision was made for the rehousing of these unfortunates, the majority of whom are on relief. The average rent for such dwellings is $12.50 per month. I am wondering if Congress will expect the property owners of the District to meet the situation when these tenants are forced into their new and better homes. ARCHIE MITCHELL.

"Unholy" Alliance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The columns of the daily press have lately been filled with articles by self-styled political experts, suggesting an unholy union between Democrats (termed by these gentry "conservative" Democrats) and the reactionary faction of Republicans of the industrial manufacturing States.

Nothing could be more foreign to the principles of real Democrats than an alliance with those whose doctrines are so diametrically opposite to the traditional Democratic creed. States' rights is, of course, a constitutionally guaranteed principle, asserted by Federalist New England first.

The Democratic Party is historically and dynastically a party of free trade. That is the major belief of the party and upon that belief it must stand or fall. Whether a Bryan or a Wilson or an F. D. Roosevelt may temporarily control the machinery of the party is beside the question; but that men who are by birth and by the tradition of long centuries in England and America free traders should combine with the protectionists of the manufacturing East is unthinkable.

Elections are lost by votes, but parties are only lost by surrender of basic principle. CITIZEN.

Washington, June 2.

Back To Jefferson.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The 4,000 farmers who assembled in Washington during the week of May 13, to thank President Roosevelt for favors received and to organize for future benefits, did not come as farmers. They came as beneficiaries of class legislation. They were the advance guard of other armies which may follow in the procedure of sharing the wealth of others, not only promised by new political leaders, but already performed in ominous degree by legislation under the New Deal.

The Jeffersonian principle of "equal rights for all, special privileges to none" is thus violated and shattered. Future share-the-wealth armies assembling in Washington may be cordially welcomed at the south portico of the White House by President Roosevelt or President Huey Long. It makes little difference which. It is possible, however, that an awakened people will demand a return to the democracy of Thomas Jefferson.

HENRY WARE ALLEN.

Tax On Thrift.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It amazes me that the residents of the District of Columbia supinely submit to the unfair and exorbitant tax on intangibles imposed by a Congress in which they have no representation. On a $1,000 bond paying 5 per cent the tax is equivalent to a 10 per cent income tax and it is still worse where one has securities on which one is receiving no income and which may not come back for years, if ever.

It seems to me that I recall being taught in my schooldays that American colonists fought a war against England because of taxation without representation, yet we in the District submit to this unrighteous tax, though we have no voice in its imposition, nor in any other matter concerning our city.

Whether we ever get the vote in the District is problematical, but are there not enough public-spirited people in Washington to band together to fight against this iniquitous tax on thrift? Why should people who have put by something against a rainy day be obliged to pay both an income and a capital tax while those who have saved nothing pay only an income tax? It is class legislation directed against the backbone of every nation—those who have tried to provide for the future in order to avoid becoming public charges.

Why must some of us be penalized for living in Washington?

Oppose Liquor Monopoly.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On May 27 Mrs. Mary E. Norton, chairman of the House District Commitee, presented a bill, H. R. 6510, to the House of Representatives. This bill was intended to tighten the provisions of the alcohol beverage control act of the District of Columbia. An amendment was made to the bill by Mrs. Norton which provides, among other things, "That no retailer of liquor beverages can purchase liquor, except from a local wholesaler."

This bill with the rider attached passed the House and is now pending before the Senate District Committee.

This organization, consisting of approximately 40 retail liquor dealers, wishes to express to you as strong as possible our protest and objection to this provision. It creates a monopoly for the local wholesalers; it leaves to the local wholesalers the exclusive right to select the brands of merchandise to be sold to the consumer; it places the retailer and consumer at the mercy of these local wholesalers both as to brands, quality and price of merchandise. We are desirous of serving the public with any brand of liquors they may desire at reasonable prices and the pending legislation will prohibit this.

We Always Thought So.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Who believes the Administration is surprised at the turn things have taken by the Supreme Court decision? It is a question that has been argued since the introduction of NRA. No truly American-spirited man ever thought it was constitutional.

There is no trouble with the Constitution, but with politicians who have always coveted more power than is legitimate, until now nothing satisfies them but all power. We would be more efficiently governed if the States resumed their former degree of self-government. States, like people, understand their own business best and Washington would have plenty to do with its own constitutional duties.

Let us have Representatives who represent and let all classes be permitted to have a spokesman in Washington when needed. But all "marches on the Capitol" and all attempts to coerce or bribe should be prohibited. M. M. S.

Annapolis, Md., June 3.

"Let It Alone."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The unfortunate remark of our President about reverting to "horse and buggy days" will live to plague him. The Constitution of the United States is conceded to be the greatest document ever conceived by the brain of man at one sitting. It should be, and is, the bulwark of a free and liberty-loving people. Being founded on the principle of truth, it will fit any condition.

The so-called depression, with prevalent fear, is the result of our own careless living and extravagant spending, and, as one of our foremost divines recently expressed himself, lack of moral conduct.

The Constitution is all right (let it alone). If we but exercise a little of the simple, strong faith of our forefathers, all will be well.

WILLIAM R. WALTON.

The Parking Ban.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is really too bad that Frederick R. Barkley is not satisfied with the Shrine parking arrangements.

However, the rush of out-of-town cars next week will perhaps suggest to everyone the reason for the ban on parking in the downtown district. PERTINAX.

No Pensioned Daughters.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In answer to "Letters to the Editor," headed "Confederate Pensions," and signed "Yours for Justice," in the June 5 issue of The Post, let me say that daughters of Union soldiers do not get pensions, so why should "Daughters of the Confederacy" get pensions when their fathers fought against the Union and the Government? There would be no "Justice" in such action.

DAUGHTER OF A UNION SOLDIER.

Another View Of Decisions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am in profound sympathy with our Administration in regard to upholding a living wage, but my loyalty to our Constitution is paramount.

The Supreme Court decision was a godsend to the workingman as a whole. GEORGE KELLY.

'Fanning The Air

Postoffice, Friday.

OF course, you have your radio-preferences. You ought to have, nowadays, the radio is everywhere with us—sometimes, like the world, it "is too much with us."

And of course, your radio-preferences interest Pitts Sanborn. They ought to; besides being one of the best of music-critics, he is Director of the Radio Institute of the Audible Arts—and that was founded with the avowed purpose "to further the advancement of radio and to secure for every listener the full benefit and satisfaction that can be derived from the radio as an instrument of entertainment and education."

But, in the case immediately before us, our former Classmate Sanborn has not been directly worrying about everybody's radio-preferences. He has been conducting a survey of the radio preferences of "a group of recognized leaders in various fields."

And some of its results are eye-openers.

For instance, take (or leave) Dr. Willis Whitney, chemist, vice-president in charge of the General Electric Co.'s Research Laboratory at Schenectady, winner of the 1934 Edison Medal. He likes both William Lyon Phelps and Ed Wynn.

And what radio-rumblings would you expect economist Dr. Edwin W. Kemmerer or psychiatrist Karl A. Menninger to prefer—Menninger of the American Association for the Study of Epilepsy, Kemmerer who stabilizes countries' currencies while machine-guns bespatter the walls around him? Those two gentlemen, like Rosa Ponselle, prefer symphonic orchestras.

Music hath charms, too, to soothe Secretary Roper and, though you're not surprised that Maine's Governor Brann stands up for Maine's Rudy Vallee you are surprised to find operatic tenor Frederick Jagel of the same taste.

It takes Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, to write: "I abominate jazz and crooning." And it takes the illustrious illustrator James Montgomery Flagg to bar "female barytones, patronizing female educators and political windbags."

Of course, there's ever a temptation to brag when you answer one of those questionnaires such as that on which Classmate Sanborn has based his returns. But there can be no suspicion of bluff about Bluff Robert Ripley's responses: his favorite "educational program" is that provided by "Believe It or Not"—Ripley . . .

* * *

Who can account for tastes? The Post-Impressionist often likes Burns & Allen, nearly always likes "Amos an' Andy."

We once, in this erudite Column, won transient popularity by venturing to intimate that we didn't join the applause of Mr. Boake Carter's warmest admirers. Whereas Sanborn's survey does not demonstrate that, in this respect, we resemble St. Athanasius during the darkest days of the Arian heresy—unus contra mundum—our former classmate does pull, out of his magic hat, some impression votes against us.

Julia Peterkin—Julia Mood that was—once won a Pulitzer Prize, and she wrote the novel (not the hymn) called "Roll, Jordan, Roll." Yet Mrs. Peterkin ranks Mr. Carter fourth in her list of favorites: a little lower than the Pro-Arte String Quartet of Brussels, a little higher than Edwin C. Hill.

And Vida Dutton Scudder—but you know who she is! She has published at least a dozen books between "The Life of the Spirit in the Modern English Poets" (1895) and "The Franciscan Adventure" (1931). From 1910 she was for seventeen years Professor of English Literature at Wellesley; now she is Professor Emeritus. She is a great critic—she must be: she once praised one of the Post-Impressionist's books. And she rates Mr. Carter sixth among eleven.

But, Mrs. Peterkin, Miss Scudder, didn't you ever hear Mr. Carter pronounce "entourage?"

Why——

Well, anyway, whoever may oppose us in our phobias, we have the cheered-hoarse support of the "all sorts and conditions of men" of another Church Father—of St. John Chrysostom of the Golden Mouth, to wit—for our greatest preference.

Booth Tarkington is still a pretty good writer, thank you. So, frequently, is Thornton Wilder. A lot of readers would say something of the sort about Sophie Kerr.

Neysa McMein can always draw. Frederick MacMonnies can often sculpt. Judith Anderson knows how to act—even at a radio-survey.

Ralph Eugene Diffendorfer is Corresponding Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions. Dr. Morris Fishbein edits the Journal of the American Medical Association. Willard W. Beaty is superintendent of the Bronxville public schools. Stanley Walker is nearly as good a newspaper-man as your Post-Impressionist.

And all of these, and many more, are for Alex Woollcott.

And so are we!

A Kingdom For Chaos!

"THE New Dealers are sho' having a lot of trouble getting the chaos they want, ain't they?" asked Pete, the taxi driver. "Yes, sir, I've seen a lot of men after something in my day, after something intently. Naturally, a fellow driving a cab around all day would run into a lot of men who are after something. And I mean I've seen them after something feverishly, that is, they would be right down and really after it. And I imagines most of them sooner or later gets what they's after.

"But these New Dealers, it don't seem to matter how hard they look for chaos after the sinking of the NRA they can't seem to find it. I don't understand it, either. You would just think that with so many of them looking that somewhere they would be able to find it.

"Of course, maybe when that skeleton NRA gets on the job it will be able to do better. I suppose an organization with nothing to do but look for chaos oughta find some, don't you?

• • • •

"It's sorta like a specialist. Take an eye specialist, for example. Well, he's liable to be better on the eyes than a man who treats all parts of you. He can put glasses on you quicker. Well, it seems logical that an organization doing nothing but hunting for chaos, specializing in chaos, would be better than those who just hunt for chaos along with their other duties.

"It makes me feel right bad for the New Dealers, though. I likes to see people succeed. I'm not like those ball players who beefed because Babe Ruth got so much money. If you ask me, that's what's wrong with us proletariat. We're always beefing about the other fellow getting too much.

"Only this morning I was tellin' the little woman, I says to her, 'I'm glad I'm not that way.'

"And she says, 'You're glad you're not which way?' My little woman always takes an interest in my thoughts, so every time I say something out loud like 'I'm glad I'm not that way' she always asks me what. I guess that's what they mean when they call the little woman the helpmate, don't you? They mean she helps you to get coherent. Ho, ho, that's a good one. I'll bet my little woman'd kill me if she heard me say that, 'cept she always did say I was a card.

"Well, when I said 'I'm glad I'm not that way' I meant I was glad I did not begrudge Babe Ruth getting the money he was getting.

• • • •

"That's the reason I wish the New Dealers could find their chaos 'cause they want it so badly. I never heard anybody yelp so much in all my life as they did when the NRA went down. They went running all over town like dogs with tin cans tied to their tails yelping 'chaos! chaos!' and everybody would look to see where was the chaos and there wouldn't be no chaos.

"Of course, it's sort of hard for them to bring on chaos because no employer with any sense who is making money will want to bring on labor trouble and quit making that money. And most employers have sense when its comes to making money. It ain't that they are so good-hearted and want to live up to their codes because they were such grand things. It's just because if things are going along nicely with them they're not going out to invite trouble. Now you can put that in your pipe and smoke it.

"On the other hand, there are some employers with whom things ain't going along nicely at all. They ain't making money so naturally they will try to reduce wages or increase hours. The New Dealers say these employers ought to be put out of business. They figure it would be better for these men to work for Mr. Roosevelt's public works program at wages running from $19 to $95 a month. Well, people's got a right to their own opinion. It sounds screwy to me.

"Another thing the New Dealers are afraid of is that these fellows who are having such a hard time of it will chisel under the bigger and stronger businesses. We seem to have a mighty lot of these big businesses around us, though.

"But the New Dealers have got to have their chaos. Why don't they put on a contest and give a prize out of works funds to the one working up the best chaos? They could give him the Passamaquoddy project.

"Well, here's where you get out."

"Mrs. O'Toole will give you a few pointers—after that you'll have to do it yourselves!"

Geneva Labor Conference

United States Represented For First Time At International Conference; Experts Accompany Delegation Of Governmental, Employer And Worker Representatives.

By Stephane Botchev,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva (By Mail).

FOR the first time since its entry into the International Labor Organization the United States of America is participating in the general conference of that institution, whose 1935 session opened in Geneva on the third day of June. At this conference there will be an important general discussion on the principal problems of economic and social policy, which are treated in the report of the director of the labor office, Harold Butler.

The conference now opening in Geneva is for the International Labor Organization, what the Assembly is for the League of Nations—its supreme power. Every year the league holds a general discussion of a political character on the basis of a report by the secretary general. In the same manner, the International Labor Organization holds a general discussion every year on the report of its director.

But it must be emphasized that the discussion here is much freer, since the delegations to the conference are, for the most part, composed not of diplomats but of business men, workers and governmental delegates who come directly from active administrative work. Furthermore, the problems which are discussed in the director's report would not lend themselves easily to a diplomatic discussion. It is only necessary to glance over the present report to become aware of this fact.

THE basic thought in Mr. Butler's current report is that the economic and social evolution of the world in 1934 demonstrates in a peremptory manner that we are now passing through a period of inescapable transition from the liberal economy of laissez faire to the economy of planning. It is impossible here to note completely, even in resume, the studies of different domains of world economy which Mr. Butler brings to the support of his thesis in his voluminous, well-documented report.

In the anti-unemployment policies inaugurated by many governments, he sees the most striking proof of the fact that State intervention has become a real necessity in contemporary economy. In fact, he declares that generally speaking, there has been no improvement except where the State has intervened actively to combat unemployment, and this not only with the aid of cheap credit provided by internal borrowing to stimulate production, but even by great public works undertaken by the State itself.

The reduction of hours of work has also shown itself to be a very efficient method of fighting unemployment, but where this has been done, in the collective interest, it has been possible only through the intervention of public power.

THE generalisation throughout the world of State control of the organization of industry and of production in general, and even of direct intervention by the State on the economic terrain, is another proof which Mr. Butler cites in support of his thesis. However, the labor office director is not blind to the fact that although we are now in a period of transition, and although planning has become a necessity, it is also something which is thus far practiced only gropingly. The conditions of the new economy of the future are still in the process of formation.

The conference discussion will not be limited to these broader aspects and will not be lost in vague generalisations, for it will also have to consider a number of practical problems which must be solved, or at least taken under serious consideration. These include the problem of unemployment among young people, the question of paid holidays for workers, the prohibition of women's work in mines, the problem of conservation of social insurance rights acquired by workers who change their domicile from one country to another, the recruiting of colonial labor, etc. However, the big question will be that of the reduction of hours of work as a method of combating unemployment.

(Since this article was written, the employer delegates have met in Geneva and voted to oppose the proposed 40-hour week international convention.—Editor.)

The measures which the United States tentatively adopted under the NRA in this respect have been the object of very attentive study by the international labor office. It will be recalled that of 541 codes of fair competition in force in January, 1935, which covered more than 95 per cent of all industrial workers, 85 per cent fix the hours of work at 40 per week. Yet the question continues to be agitated, and the American Federation of Labor has come out in favor of 30 hours.

• • • •

IN GERMANY, in Czechoslovakia, in Great Britain, measures looking toward a standardized forty-hour week have been adopted or are being considered. The evolution of the question in Italy is especially interesting. There the procedure was to consider separately the case of each industry, as was done, as a matter of fact, in the United States as well. After reductions of hours of work had been put into effect as a result of this consideration of the needs of different industries, and after the Italians had become convinced of the efficiency of this method of combating unemployment, the Fascist Grand Council decided definitely, on February 16, 1935, to adopt the principle of the 40-hour week for all industry. It is expected that the conference will have these experiments in mind during its work and that, if a draft convention is not voted, the result of the discussion will be at least a recommendation to the governments.

(Only the United States delegation's employer representative, Sam A. Lewisohn, of New York, and Gino Olivetti, of Italy, favored the 40-hour week in the opening session on Tuesday.—Editor.)

The conference will last about three weeks. The United States is represented by Walton Hamilton, professor of law at Yale, and Miss Grace Abbott, former director of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, as Government delegates, and Daniel Tracy, president of the Electricians Union, as workers' representative. The delegation is accompanied by a number of experts as advisers to governmental, employer and worker delegates.

ThomasHardy Lost Novel

By

William Lyon Phelps

TO THOSE interested in the verse and prose of Thomas Hardy (1840-1928), which ought to mean everyone reading these lines, it will be exciting to read a little novel just published called "An Indiscretion in the Life of an Heiress," edited by Carl J. Weber, professor of English literature at Colby College, Waterville, Me. (Published by Johns Hopkins Press, Baltimore.)

The editor calls it on the title page "Hardy's 'Lost Novel' now first printed in America." Mr. Weber's introduction explains its origin and discovery.

Hardy's first regularly published novel was "Desperate Remedies," which appeared in 1871, and did not attract much attention. It is more the framework of a novel than a finished work of art; but the very next year, 1872, appeared "Under the Greenwood Tree," a masterpiece of its kind, and from then on he did the steady work of a great writer.

This early book, "The Indiscretion," was written and submitted to the publishers in 1868, and quite properly rejected. That is not in the least strange; because, in spite of some tragic intensity, its style is impossibly stilted. What seems strange to me is that Hardy should himself have printed this novel in a British magazine in 1878, the very year when appeared his greatest novel, "The Return of the Native!"

• • • •

The contrast in style and treatment between the two is nothing short of astounding.

This earliest work, now reprinted in convenient form, is an illustration of how badly and crudely a great man may begin his career. It means hope for everybody.

Yet, once begun, you have to finish it; its redeeming merit is its intense interest.

Students of English literature will naturally want a copy; but there is something for the general reader.

Republic or Monarchy?

Former Senator George Wharton Pepper, in a special article in next Sunday's Washington Post, recalls the incident of the woman who asked Benjamin Franklin, as he emerged from signing the Declaration of Independence, whether it was "republic or monarchy?"

"A Republic," replied Franklin, adding, "if you can keep it." Mr. Pepper, recognized as an authority on Constitutional law, captions his article on the subject of the recent Supreme Court decisions, "Page Doctor Franklin." He applies the test of American common sense in an effort to strip the Schechter case decision of all technicalities.

He asks two questions in connection with the decision . . . and says "upon the answer given to these two questions depends, humanly speaking, the governmental future of the United States."

Lawyers, statesmen, officials and students of political science will read Mr. Pepper's article with more than usual interest. But plain people will also appreciate its simple, direct presentation of the facts, the problems and the import of the case.

Implications of TVA

THE Tennessee Valley Authority, some say, is a mere act of the Congress. Others see it as a fairly simple project of building a dam and making a lake. Or it is something which Comptroller General McCarl assails for its bookkeeping methods. Or it is a fly in the power companies' soup. TVA is a great many things.

But—and that is a very large "but"—how commonly is it realized that the total implications of TVA mean a thoroughgoing, wholly unparalleled spearhead into a brave new world?

None better, seemingly, than Joseph K. Hart, who in the eloquent and saga-conscious pages of "Education for an Age of Power: the TVA Poses a Problem" (Harper, $2.50) spreads forth the order of things which TVA adumbrates. Prof. Hart, one of the half dozen foremost exponents of modern trends of education in this country, writes with a kind of Nietzschean hewing-to-the-line which makes his book a rare excitement to read. Other emotions, too, will leap up from these pages; I can't imagine very much which could cause swifter attacks of apoplexy in certain quarters. But high blood pressure or not, these are arguments and theses which must be heard. Chiefly because of their clear, simple inevitability to thinking minds.

• • • •

THE root of the matter lies in the fact that TVA and its vast physical project are being set down, lock, stock and barrel, in the midst of one of our traditional provincial cultures. And that project, with its huge dispensing of electric power and its scientific model city of Norris, stands as a forecast of the kind of power-world which we, in all the rest of the country are steadily if less swiftly approaching. Hence the problem of what a mountain hill-billy would do in a house and a community filled with the modern gadgets of power-living is exactly the problem of 100,000,000 Americans in our physical world ruled by science.

As as token, for those who might think there is no problem at all, the fact is that in this country we have increased our supply of industrial power 540 times in the last century. Obviously, that sort of thing is not without some sliver of effect all through human life!

• • • •

WHAT Prof. Hart stresses, then, is the deplorable chasm between our culture and our technology. Dramatized before us in the Tennessee Valley, it exists on every hand about us. Down there they are building the most advanced sort of city, a place for our high-water mark of physical living, and what a cosmic pity, he observes, if the cultural and spiritual side of living therein should lag behind. "Why should America spend $50,000,000 for the purpose of putting a few new lights in the Tennessee Valley if they are merely to light better the same antique ways of living? If nothing more than this should happen, those Northern critics of the whole program who have coined the description: 'The Tennessee River touches seven States and drains 48!' would be fully justified."

Hence the challenge to build up a culture, fit and meet for these new conditions, to fill out and give body to the inherent cultural sterility of modern technology. And that challenge, he states, will not be met by our present educational system, which looks either to a dead past or fondly tries to continue the status quo.

Our academic education, he says, is essentially as sterile as science—what we need is an education to bring out a pliable, adaptable "instrumentalism" which will be aware of, and lead our citizens toward, the trend and problems of the future. As the late President Arthur T. Hadley of Yale wrote in 1923: "Our fundamental problem is to make people see what really is their duty under modern conditions instead of letting them think they are doing their duty in applying yesterday's ideals of morals and law to the business of today."

American Messiahs

Installment XX—Sweet Fascism in the Piney Woods (Part 2)

This is the twentieth installment of "American Messiahs," by the Unofficial Observer, author of the "New Dealers," which appeared last year. While "American Messiahs" does not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post, it is commended as a most candid discussion of the mavericks, the reformers and the radio spellbinders, now booming their way across the American political stage.

Allied in function to Talmadge, is Theodore Gilmore Bilbo, junior Senator from Mississippi and one of the South's best-established rabble-rousers.

For more than a generation "the man Bilbo" has had a stranglehold on the small farmer vote of Mississippi. Born 58 years ago in Juniper Grove, Miss., Bilbo studied at the University of Nashville for three years, dropped out for sev- years of teaching country schools, and then studied law at Vanderbilt and Michigan Universities. He then simultaneously entered the practice of law and politics—the two things are synonymous in rural America—at Poplarsville, Miss. He followed the smoothly-worn cursus honorum of Democratic machine-politics in the cotton belt, first to the State Senate, then to the lieutenant governorship (1912-16) and finally to the governorship (1916-20). He stepped out for a term, as is required by the constitutions of many Southern States, and was beaten for the gubernatorial nomination in 1924 by the women, whose enfranchisement he had neglected to espouse. By 1928 he had been sufficiently forgiven to win the second term as Governor, and in 1934 he went after the nomination for the United States Senate.

It was a three-cornered race, the progressive Representative Ross Collins and Senator Hubert Stephens being the other entries. When no one got a majority in the first primary, Collins, who was low man, dropped out, and Bilbo nosed out Stephens in the run-off primary, thus bringing to an end a career of unterrified but undistinguished Tory Democracy in the Senate.

Bilbo is a typical spellbinder from the Deep South who once called Senator Stephens "a vicious, malicious, pusillanimous, cold-blooded, premeditated, plain, ordinary United States senatorial liar." That kind of talk packs 'em in the aisle in the Southern camp-meeting belt. In fact, Bilbo has the true camp-meeting touch. As a young man he learned to play an organ and sing hymns, and these talents became a stock part of his electioneering technique, since many Mississippi campaign meetings are held in churches—they have the only halls in the average country district. At Poplarsville, Bilbo took the precaution of becoming secretary of the County Baptist Association and frequently substituted for the pastor in rural Baptist churches.

It would be stupid to pretend that men like Bilbo are mere slick electioneers, or even inherently conservative when measured against their State psychology. As a matter of record, Bilbo put through some highly progressive measures in his first term as Governor, such as establishing a State tubercular hospital and a school for delinquent minors, improving the penal system and refurbishing the old capitol. He couldn't succeed himself under Mississippi law, but he elected one of his friends to the job. This friend, Lee Russell, was sued for breach of promise by a stenographer. Bilbo refused to testify for the stenographer and was jailed for contempt of court—not his first brush with the law. As a State senator he took money to vote for a candidate for the United States Senate. He is not the type of person who makes money out of politics. He has always been near the subsistence level in public life.

Bilbo's second term as Governor produced little but oratory and one deadlock after another with the Legislature. His program was constructive: a brick highway system built by convict labor, a State printing plant to print free textbooks for the schools, consolidation of rural schools, creation of a State constabulary, and such. He was blocked at every turn, but his successor took over much of the program and put it across—and also strove valiantly to clean up the financial mess which Bilbo had left behind through failure to tax properly.

Perhaps the chief difference between Bilbo and Long is that Long had the cleverness and ruthlessness to put over his program and get a political grip on his State, while Bilbo could get elected but lacked the capacity to handle a Legislature and cement his political power.

When Roosevelt came into power at Washington, Bilbo was badly in need of a job and Senator Stephens, Bilbo's bitter enemy, wouldn't help him. At this point, Pat Harrison, the good-natured, conservative Democratic stalwart, gave him a lift. Bilbo was placed in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as chief of its press-clipping service at a salary of $6,000. The following year, Bilbo went back to take his revenge on Stephens, who had been in the Senate since 1923. Pat Harrison was on the spot. Harrison's term expires in 1936 and he had viewed with anxious concern the rise of the Kingfish just across the line in Louisiana and the spread of his share-our-wealth movement in Mississippi. Pat went through the gestures of helping Stephens but saw to it that he didn't make an enemy of Bilbo.

It was a red-hot campaign. Bilbo made more than a thousand speeches, and he draws a big crowd whenever he speaks. The Mississippi farmers like his style—his medium build, his pinched Coolidgean face, his sporty clothes and his spread-eagle oratory. Bilbo based his campaign on a promise to "out-Huey Huey" when he got to the Senate—and the crowds ate it up, which is no mean compliment to the Senator from Louisiana. However, Bilbo was too cautious to make a direct hook-up with the Kingfish. The Long crowd wanted to come into Mississippi for the run-off and help him—on condition. Bilbo shied at the condition. Two or three days before the votes were cast, according to the Kingfish crowd, Bilbo telephoned Huey asking him to instruct the Share-Our-Wealth clubs (who had supported Collins in the primary, but without open direction from Long) to vote for him. Long replied that he would send telegrams at his own expense to all the Share-Our-Wealth clubs in Mississippi, urging them to vote for Bilbo, if Bilbo would send a telegram asking him to do so and promising to support the share-our-wealth program. Bilbo sent an evasive reply but probably got most of the share-our-wealth votes anyway.

When Bilbo strode into the Senate on his pledge to "out-Huey Huey" there were rumbles of delighted anticipation, but the word soon came that Pat Harrison had this "wild man" in hand, and, sure enough, one fine day Pat turned up at the White House with Bilbo in tow. And Bilbo came out of the White House and announced that he would go down the line for the New Deal. As a reward, he got better committee assignments than usually fall to senatorial "freshmen" and doubtless assurance of a bigger share of patronage than generally comes the way of a junior Senator from a "sure" State.

Then the word spread that, under Pat's management, Bilbo was primed to "take on" the Kingfish at the very outset of the 1935 session of Congress. He was to be the man who gave Huey a dose of his own medicine, and the "insiders" waited for the fireworks—but in vain. When Long speaks, Bilbo is always there, watching like a hawk. Sometimes he moves up in a front seat to get a better view of Huey in action, but he has not yet "taken him on." Perhaps, after hearing Huey's oratorical orgasms, Bilbo decided that discretion is the better part of politics when faced with your superior in the art of rough-and-tumble debate. Perhaps Pat has decided that it is better strategy not to fire until you see the whites of their eyes.

As matters stand, Bilbo is the man who may save Pat Harrison his Senate seat in 1936. Long is camping on Pat's trail, and if Long could find a good candidate to put up against him Pat would have tough sledding in 1936, just as Joe Robinson is likely to have, and for the same reason. However, if Bilbo remains loyal to Pat, the Long invasion will be met at the border by the veteran adjective-stringer of Poplarsville. The Long people are already preparing for the battle. They have combed Bilbo's variegated history and will try to pillory him, and if the Long people don't back down, and if Bilbo doesn't change his spots, the senatorial primary in Mississippi in 1936 may be one of the most glorious oratorical and mud-slinging free-for-alls in recent political history.

The significance of this batttle is not in Bilbo's personality but in the fact that it may be the opening gun in Long's campaign to strike at Roosevelt by enlarging the Kingfish Empire in the Deep South and by punishing one of Roosevelt's senatorial stand-bys. Like so many of the back-country Southern politicians, Bilbo is a spunky fellow with a thick skin. He is more progressive than Pat Harrison and some people suspect that the wily Pat has instilled in him the idea that if he can stop Huey he may be a vice presidental nominee—or some other poliitcal big shot—one of thees days. The only thing sure is that Bilbo is one of Long's closest observers and that when—and if—the day comes, Bilbo will go into action with every feint and thrust in his opponent's repertoire fixed and analyzed in his mind. For it must be remembered that Bilbo and Harrison are fighting for more than the safety of the Roosevelt Administration against the Long raid; they are fighting to preserve themselves.

Alabama, which supervised the birth of the Southern Confederacy, and South Carolina, which had always been the unquestioned social and moral leader of the South, are moving with the times. It is probably a matter of breeding and tradition, for it is notable that Alabama has taken the lead in progressive education, while South Carolina has elected the first "labor" Governor in its history. Perhaps the true meaning of this phenomenon is that these two States have shaken off the irresponsible poor-white Fascism which was enthroned throughout the South after the reconstruction era and have returned to the substance if not the forms of the pre-Civil War feudalism—with its aristocratic conception of duties as well as rights.

Take the case of Bibb Graves, Governor of Alabama. He owed his election to the governorship in 1926 to the Ku Klux Klan. He was re-elected in 1934 as a New Deal liberal.

Like so many other figures in the South (Talmadge, Long, Johnston) he represents the revolt of the landowner against the increasing power of the industrialist, and especially against the anonymous power and privileges of absentee corporate ownership. In his first campaign his main pledge was to "hitch the big mules to the wagon." He succeeded in doing it and got the Legislature to tax the gross receipts of railroads, telegraph, telephone and express companies, the production of hydroelectric power, and the sale of cigars and cigarettes. He hiked the taxes on gasoline, coal and iron, and doubled the license taxes on corporations and businesses.

He used the revenues so obtained to expand the public health service, to raise the average length of the school year, and to increase teachers' salaries from an average of $665 to $725 a year. As a result of the expanded public health service, by 1930 Alabama had the lowest death rate of any State east of the Mississippi River, the death rate from typhoid fever being cut in half, while tuberculosis declined and smallpox and dysentry practically disappeared.

This was an elementary job, but many of the South's political problems are elementary problems as compared to those of the Northern industrial States, and Graves seems to have done the job well. The law of Alabama forbade him to succeed himself but he came back in 1934 and once more won the nomination for the governorship. This time he ran as an out-and-out New Dealer, pledged to the Federal child labor amendment, the establishment of a State department of labor, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, better regulation of public utilities, cooperation with TVA, and similar reforms. His Klan days were forgotten and liberals and labor rallied to his support.

Bibb Graves thus appears to be a subtler, but more effective, way of counteracting the Long influence than that represented by Bilbo. It should not be forgotten that the Kingfish, notwithstanding his clamor for wealth-sharing, has done virtually nothing in the way of even elementary social security legislation. Moreover, Graves does not represent the old-style upper-class Southern politician whom Huey has been lashing with whips of scorpions in New Orleans. He was born in Hope Hull, Ala., in 1873, graduated from the University of Alabama in 1893 and from Yale Law School in 1896. He took up law practice in Montgomery, served two terms in the State Legislature, and was city attorney and Democratic State chairman before he won the nomination for Governor in 1926. Moreover, he served in the National Guard since his youth, went to France as colonel of the 117th Field Artillery, and helped to organize the Alabama command of the American Legion.

Graves, together with the leaders of the Alabama delegation in Congress—the liberal Hugh Black and the intelligent Bankhead brothers—represents the wiser and more responsible elements in the Deep South. They realize that the old order is changing, that the South has been backward in its social legislation, and that it must readjust itself to cope with the rise of industrialism. Birmingham, Ala., is potentially the iron capital of North America—and with the dubious future of cotton. In the last two years, Alabama has led all other States in the active rehabilitation of landless farmers—dispossessed small owners, tenants and share-croppers—by placing them on small pieces of land. Senator Bankhead is now sponsoring the broad plan to expand and improve this method of rehabilitation throughout the South and the entire country.

The importance of Bibb Graves in this process is that he knows how to appeal to the Alabama back-countrymen. As a rabble-rouser he is no match for Long, Talmadge or Bilbo, but Alabama is a responsible and conservative community and the process of moderate change which her leaders have initiated is an ameliorating force in the social struggle that is coming to the surface in the South. This struggle is an intensely serious element in the national picture—Long and his rivals are exploiting the grievances which make it inevitable, where people like Graves and Johnston of South Carolina are striving to remove the cause of those grievances by progressive legislation.

For the South may have had its Tom Heflins and its Coley Bleases—just as Georgia no has its Talmadge—but in South Carolina last fall something new happened under the Southern sun. A former cotton mill-hand was elected Governor, when Olin D. Johnston beat Coleman L. Blease in the primary and on January 5, 1935, took the oath of office in the Statehouse in Columbia.

Industrialism has spread so rapidly through the Piedmont area that today there are about 60,000 cotton mill-hands in South Carolina, and they account for a fifth of the vote, but never until last year did they nominate one of their own for a major office. Last year, they lost their old poor-white consciouaness and to a certain extent began to vote according to their interests as mill workers rather than according to their prejudice as former agrarians.

Johnston's story is typical of what has been happening to the poor whites in the Southern Piedmont. He was the son of a poor farmer. At the age of 12 he went to work in a mill in the village of Honea Path, later the scene of some savage fighting during the textile strike of 1934. He worked his way through the Textile Institute at Spartanburg and then through two years at Wofford College, supporting himself by pressing pants in the daytime and reading proof on a local newspaper at night. When we entered the World War, he volunteered, went to Europe with the A. E. F., and returned after the armistice with the chevrons of a sergeant and a citation for bravery in action.

He then finished his course at Wofford and got a law degree at the University of South Carolina, opening a law office in Spartanburg. While he was still at college he was elected to the State Legislature and he was reelected when he took up law practice. In 1930 he entered the race for the governorship. Starting as a dark horse, he led the first primary and was beaten by a narrow margin in the run-off. During the next four years he visited every corner of the State, developed a good platform manner, and prepared for his next campaign. In 1934 he ran again and was elected.

In contrast to some Southern demagogues who affect the shirt-sleeves, tobacco-chawing, call-me-Charley technique of hobnobbing with the voters, Johnston showed himself as a pleasant but a dignified man who knew how to speak literate English and was not afraid to show signs of ordinary intelligence. He didn't need to remind the farmers and the mill-hands that he was one of them. They knew it and they also liked oracular proof that one of themselves could become as personable, intelligent and important as any gentleman born to wealth or privilege. Johnston won the 1934 run-off primary, and with it the election, as a real representative of the South which is shaking off the poor-white complex.

He ran as a moderate liberal Roosevelt style, and as in most Southern States one of his big cards was a pledge to reduce the auto license tax. South Carolina has been a poverty-stricken State since the Northern victory in the Civil War diverted to New York the railway traffic which had made Charleston the greatest port of shipment in the United States, and it has not produced any dynamic political figures since the age of Calhoun and the statesmen of secession. On this account, Johnston is being carefully watched. He is neither a rabble-rouser nor a reactionary, but probably belongs to the same category as Bibb Graves, of Alabama, although as yet he is unproved.

His importance lies in what he symbolizes, rather than in his own political motive power. A powerful process is at work throughout the South, and even in parts of the industrial North and East, to substitute the rule of farmers and laborers for government by remote control of bankers and business men. The instrument of that remote control has been, in the South, the careful cultivation of prejudice, against the Negro or the North, rather than against a system by which such prejudices could be invoked as a device to prevent economic reform or social justice from interfering with irresponsible profiteering.

Do Talmadge and Bilbo represent the means by which the major speculative and financial forces in Southern politics are attempting to combat the "Share-Our-Wealth" movement or is their answer to be moderate and less dramatic reformers of the caliber of Graves and Johnston?

The answer to this question is one that concerns the entire country, for it alone can supply the final explanation to what has been happening in regions closer to the seat of the American financial empire than the squalid mill towns of the Piedmont and the tax-ridden poor farmers of the lower reaches of the Mississippi.

Woman and Son Will Be Hanged In Closed Tomb

Precautions Taken Against Sight of Execution Even From Air.

By the Associated Press.

Georgetown, Del., June 6—The prayers of a gray-haired mother and her son echoed through the corridors of Suffolk Prison today while guards tested a scaffold in the wooden tomb in which they will be hanged at daylight.

Recovered somewhat from the hysteria that gripped them through last night's storm and this morning, Mrs. May H. Carey, 55, and Howard, 27, prepared to die for the insurance-policy slaying of her brother, Robert Hitchens, seven years ago.

An eleventh-hour appeal, looked for by this quaint town of some 3,000 persons, was made to Gov. C. Douglass Buck by their attorney, Frederick Whitney, today, but it apparently produced no results and the mother and son appeared resigned to their fate.

Attorney Loses Hope.

Whitney said he proposed a conference with the Governor, but that he was forced to reply negatively when the chief executive asked if there were any "leads or angles."

Carpenters late today completed erection of a 20-foot fence about Delaware's huge wooden scaffold at the rear of the prison. Canvas will be drawn over the top before the doomed mother and son are led from their cells tomorrow morning.

Prison officials explained this had been done to forestall attempts to photograph the scene from the air and to make certain that none but witnesses will see the hanging.

Mrs. Carey, who was reported to have spent last night screaming and trembling during a lightning storm that lashed the jail with rain and hail, was calm this evening as she prepared to dispose of a few personal trinkets, and to write farewell messages.

The son, too, was more composed after a night in which he paced his cell and tearfully tried to console his fear-stricken mother. Lights of the jail will be dimmed early tonight, and close watch will be kept over the two who are about to die.

Two clergymen will call at the death cells soon after the mother and son are dressed before 5 a. m., Eastern standard time, tomorrow, to remain with them until the death march.

Mrs. Carey is to wear a black dress with a bit of white about the collar. Her son will wear black trousers and a white shirt, open at the throat.

The witnesses and physicians will be assembled about the scaffold at "5 o'clock sharp."

Whether the mother will die first has not definitely been decided, but it is expected she will be the first to go.

The execution will require only a few minutes. At a given signal, Warden Hugh Smith will pull on a 40-foot rope, which will withdraw a heavy steel bolt supporting the scaffold trap door.

Mother and son have arranged their own funerals. They already have purchased their caskets and the clothes in which they are to be buried.

The execution of Mrs. Carey and her son will close one of the most puzzling crimes in Delaware in years.

The two, police officials assert, perpetrated what for seven years seemed "a perfect crime."

Millen Brothers Waiting to Die Show Bravado

Young Killers, Abe Faber to Walk to 'Chair;' Appeal Fails.

the vain efforts made to save Sacco and Vanzetti, paymaster slayers and world-known Communists, from the electric chair in 1927.

For the surly Millens, all hope had fled. Their attorney, George Stanley Harvey, and their father, Joseph Millen, Roxbury contractor, made final appeals to Governor Curley, but he steadfastly refused to intervene. He had refused to see Faber's mother, and seemed unlikely to consider Scharton's last-minute appeal.

Physically, all three were bearing up well, Harvey said after a late afternoon visit. But Faber was still bitter that the State had given him no leniency in return for the full confession he made soon after his arrest, as well as for the failure of his "sweetheart," Rose Knellar, pretty Boston bookkeeper, to visit him or send any word of cheer.

Norma Brighton Millen, minister's daughter, who honeymooned with "Murt" Millen at the height of his bandit career, sent him a verbal farewell, through Harvey, from Dedham Jail, where she is imprisoned as a murder accessory, awaiting release after the executions.

In Irving's ears rang the hysterical farewell sobs of his sister and childhood playmate, Idalyn, to whom he was "Brudgie."

Irving seemed the most cheerful of the lot, Harvey said. Murton was in good condition, and Abe better than he has been. He quoted them as saying:

Irving—"I'm not afraid to die."

Murt—"I guess we're all washed up."

Abe—"Life is life and death is death, but I really didn't get a break."

Rabbi Moses L. Sedar, Jewish chaplain, had visited the three prisoners many times of late, reading to them from the Bible, but none has said anything to indicate that his thoughts have turned toward the spiritual.

For the Millens it was a case of "getting it over with." Both have asked that their bodies be cremated.

Faber's meditations all centered on the "tough break" he was getting. Some one sent him a box containing a single white rose, but because there was no name or note attached it was not given him. Prison authorities did not wish to further upset him.

On the stroke of midnight Murton Millen will be led from death cell No. 1 into the death house where, in the presence of about a dozen witnesses, he will be put to death. Irving will die next and then Faber.

At the switch will be Robert Elliott, executioner for Massachusetts and three other States, who later is scheduled to put to death Bruno Richard Hauptmann. He will receive $450 for his work tonight.

By the Associated Press.

Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis late today refused to intervene or enter a stay to halt the execution tonight in Massachusetts of Abraham Faber, convicted with Irving and Murton Millen on charges of slaying a Needham (Mass.) policeman during a bank robbery.

William R. Scharton, noted Massachusetts criminal lawyer, who flew to Washington in order to make a last-minute plea, at once wired the Governor of Massachusetts asking a 24-hour reprieve.

Scharton finally reached Brandeis' office late today after it was learned that Brandeis had not gone to Massachusetts, as previously believed, but was still in the city.

Scharton was told that Brandeis did not believe anything would be gained by going into the case again, as it was thoroughly fresh in his mind after studying it on the original application for a review, and that he did not think there was anything he could do.

In the absence of any newly discovered evidence, Scharton was told he would not alter the decision.

New York, June 6 (AP).—The appellate division of supreme court reserved decision late today on Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt's appeal for custody of her 11-year-old daughter, Gloria.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Cla. 509. Clarendon, Va.

With midnight last night the deadline for filing intentions of candidacy subject to the Democratic primary to be held August 6, and, there having been no announcements for any of the major offices at a late hour, indications are the slate will be as follows:

For the State Senate—John W. Rust (incumbent), of Fairfax; Hugh Reid, of Arlington County, and L. C. Painter, of Fairfax.

For House of Delegates for Arlington County—William D. Medley, unopposed.

For Sheriff—Howard B. Fields (incumbent) and H. J. Odenthal.

For County Clerk—A. L. Kelley, Ralph E. Remington, I. C. Buchanan and C. B. Laycock.

For Commissioner of Revenue—Harry K. Green (incumbent), unopposed.

For Commonwealth's Attorney—Lawrence W. Douglas (incumbent), Emery N. Hosmer and John Paul Jones.

For Treasurer—Charles T. Jesse (incumbent) and Harry A. Fellows.

For County Judge—Walter U. Varney, unopposed.

For County Board—Leo Lloyd, George M. Yeatman, F. Freeland Chew, James Buchanan, C. Watt Lee, Thomas R. Mecham, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, Edward Duncan and William E. A. McShea.

Arthur C. Stickley 2d, of Arlington, prominent attorney, civic leader and former newspaperman, was the first to announce his candidacy for the Democratic executive committee of Arlington County, when he threw his hat in the ring last night as a candidate from Arlington Precinct in the Democratic primary.

Mr. Stickley has been active in behalf of his community, having appeared many times before the Arlington County Board to obtain many improvements for the Arlington and Barcroft sections. He stated today that, if elected, he would devote his untiring efforts to his constituents.

He is president of the Arlington Volunteer Fire Department, president of the Arlington Precinct Voters League, chairman of the Arlington Community Christmas tree, chairman of the committee to locate playgrounds for Arlington Precinct, member and director of the Arlington County Kiwanis Club, manager and coach of the Arlington A. C. Baseball Team in the Northern Virginia League sponsored by The Washington Post, member of the Christian Church, Arlington Citizens Association, the Arlington County Bar Association, Arlington County Democratic Club and the Young Democrats of Arlington County.

The candidate received his law training at the University of Virginia and has been actively engaged in the practice of law since 1922, with the exception of a few years when he was in the United States Government service and employed as a newspaperman.

Others known to have announced are Mrs. Ruth Marcey and J. V. Turner for the East Falls Church Precinct.

Mrs. Marcey, who has been active for many years in Democratic circles, has for a number of years been the registrar for that precinct.

Mr. Turner, one of the leading Democrats in the precinct, has been active for the party.

Announcement was made yesterday by Mrs. W. D. Martin, chairman of the membership drive for the Woman's Auxiliary to the Arlington Hospital Association, that the charter list which has now closed contains the names of more than 100 active members.

Dr. W. D. Welburn, addressing the meeting which was held in the Lyon Park Community Hall, on "Why We Need a Hospital in Arlington County," pointed out that with the rapid growth in the population the Washington hospitals are being crowded. He also stated that more than 300 Virginia babies are born out of the State each year.

The president, Mrs. J. C. Boss, reported donations from the Creative Arts Club, the Catholic Woman's Club, the Auxiliary to the Clarendon Fire Department, F. Freeland Chew and S. B. Detwiler. The donations will be deposited in a special memorial fund, which is being created by the auxiliary.

Mrs. E. J. Stocking was elected president of the Catholic Woman's Club of Arlington County at its annual meeting last night at Clarendon.

Other officers are Mrs. Clarence Halliday, vice president; Mrs. Albert Cyr, secretary, and Mrs. J. H. Nicholson, treasurer.

The club presented the pastor of St. Charles Church, the Rev. John A. Curran, with a chest of $550. Mrs. Hugh J. McGrath, chairman of the school cafeteria, reported that 7,226 lunches were served during the school year, a number of which were free.

Prince Georges Beer License Limits Lifted

Holder Is Not Prohibited From Operating Outside County Permit Area.

Maryland's $200 beer-distributor's license, authorized by the recent session of the State Legislature, does not prohibit the holder from operating outside the county in which the license was purchased, according to a ruling by Attorney General Herbert O'Conor.

The ruling, an alteration of O'Conor's decision of May 8 which made it mandatory for the licensee to operate in the county in which he resides, was announced yesterday at Upper Marlboro as the new Prince Georges County Liquor Board assumed control.

William H. Brooke, of Upper Marlboro, was inaugurated as chairman; Albert R. Hassell, District Heights, as attorney; Joseph S. Haas, of Mount Rainier, and Mrs. Mary W. Browning, of Riverdale, as board members. All are Republicans except Mrs. Browning who was retained from the old board.

Bowie Reads Ruling.

Gwynn Bowie, retiring attorney for the board, read O'Conor's ruling, which pointed out that on May 8 he gave the opinion that "section 5 of article 2B (of the new law) required every applicant to be a resident of the county in which he proposed to operate under the license applied for."

"It was my conclusion," said O'Conor, "that the license to distribute beer to other licensees could only be issued to residents of the county. Under further consideration, however, I believe that the residence requirement of article 2B, section 5, can be satisfied by the statement of the applicant's residence and place of business in a county other than Prince Georges, as in the case where the comptroller issues State-wide wholesaler's licenses.

"In each case, the law requires that sales be made from the place of business and it can hardly contended that the word 'operate,' as applied to a wholesale license, prohibits deliveries to other parts of the State.

"I find nothing in chapter 299 to require a place of business in Prince Georges County, provided the applicant has a licensed place of business elsewhere in the State."

Three Delegates Heard.

The first session of the new county liquor board heard three delegations of citizens protest the issuance of alcoholic beverage licenses.

One delegation, including Nicholas Orem, county school superintendent, opposed granting of a beer license to James Hamilton, jr., of Mitchellville, Md., because of the proximity of his place of business to the Mitchellville School. The license was granted.

An off-sale beer license also was granted John F. Myers, of Beltsville, Md., after a delegation bitterly opposed the selling of alcoholic beverages in that community. The same delegation also opposed, in vain, the issuance of an on-sale license to the Galley, a roadside clubhouse near Beltsville.

A delegation from Mount Rainier, however, was partially successful in opposition to the granting of a liquor license to Carl W. Klein, of that town. The license was held up and a hearing set for June 20.

In this combined plan, due consideration is given to the administration of the personnel problems of placement, guidance, and training.

Officer and Thug Die in Gun Battle

N.J. Detectives Shoot Down Man in Village Street.

By the Associated Press.

Warwick, N. Y., June 6.—A detective and a suspected robber were killed today when the State's new "Scotland Yard" and Paterson, N. J., detectives set a trap in the main street of this village.

Detective Robert J. Alexander, 60, chief of the Paterson detective bureau, was shot and fatally wounded when he grabbed Gifford Wright, 37, the suspected robber, in front of the postoffice. Three bullets in the abdomen felled the officer.

Gun in hand, Wright ran up the street almost into the arms of two Paterson detectives and three new York State troopers, who were hastening to Alexander's assistance. The officers opened fire. A bullet struck Wright in the head and another ploughed through his heart. He died instantly.

Wright was arrested in Paterson Monday for questioning in a hold-up, but escaped from headquarters that night. Police learned he had lived in Warwick and sent three men here to search for him.

Week Features Dance Teams At Night Clubs

The Reyes and Voltaires at Shoreham; Hardwood Floor on Roof.

By Kay Ware.

Once or twice, in the course of a night club season, a fine dance team comes to town. When they do, their performance is something to remember, and watch for in the future.

The Shoreham couldn't have picked a better team for their Terrace opening than the Reyes, those Cuban youngsters who specialize in rhumbas.

Other acts at the Shoreham include the Voltaires, two girls and three men with semiadagios and modernistic acrobatics. Ferry the Frogman concludes the bill. Barnee and orchestra furnish smart dance music.

Only hard-wood dance floor on a roof—Club Habana's at the Arlington. Only Sky-Bar in Washington—Club Habana's. Nicest dim lights are there, too, and Moe Baer's music needs no comments. If you feel like dancing to his trio of guitar, bass-fiddle and clarinet, you'll feel more like it with the full orchestra. Dancing goes on until 2 a. m.

Set your watch by "Who" played every night at 5:15 by Bamboo Room's Johnny Slaughter and his band. We're wondering who the who is who asks for "Who" so regularly.

Ramon, head waiter extraordinary at the Powhatan Roof, is thinking of growing a mustache, sideburns, or a goatee as a distinguishing feature. It started with the surprised "Joe! What are you doing here? You ought to be in Philadelphia." Ramon smiled patiently, told the guest that he, Ramon, belonged at the Powhatan and that Brother Joe was still where he belonged—at the Barclay Hotel, in Philadelphia.

With the help of the Lotus' skaters you can get almost as dizzy as you do on a Glen Echo roller-coaster. One of these roller-skating huskies will be glad to spin you in circles, set you on your staggering feet to the tune of "Show Me the Way to Go Home."

Speaking of huskies, the masculine half of the dance team—Martin by name—was All-American something or other and has a scrapbook to prove it.

More rhumbas—in the feet of Rosita Granada and Don Carlos, now dancing at Childs' Gingham Club. These two were seen in "Flying Down to Rio" and "Wonder Bar." Also in the show is Jackie Fay, specialty dancer, while Mary Jo Hamilton M. C.'s, Sammy Richardson sings and Jimmy Santmyer and Ork furnish dance music.

Every day, and sometimes more than once per, those boys at the Mayfair play and sing "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." It wouldn't be so bad except that the song and piano team that preceded them plugged the same ditty. Please can't they think up something else—or tell the patrons that request it that they never heard of "Smoke——"

Y. M. C. A. Veterans In Reunion Today

'Old-Timers' Club to Recall 83 Years' Activity.

Eighty-three years of activity will be discussed when the Y. M. C. A. "Old Timers" Club meets at 8:45 p. m. today for its annual reunion, at the Central Y. M. C. A.

Veteran members will swap reminiscences of bygone days in association history. The local Y. M. C. A., one of the first organized in the United States, was founded June 9, 1852, at a meeting of a small group of men in a building which stood at the corner of Tenth and E streets northwest.

William E. Sweet, former Governor of Colorado and head of the Colorado Y. M. C. A., for 25 years, will be the principal speaker today.

They—And Their Shadow

Rosita Granada and Don Carlos, featured in "Flying Down to Rio" and "Wonder Bar," are now dancing at Child's Gingham Club.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywords and Paragraphs.

Hollywood, June 6.

THE younger actresses, whenever it is possible, like to get on the Katharine Hepburn set and watch Hepburn act. She seems to be their model; she is what they desire to be. And Hepburn likes to play to an audience of these actresses. The day I was on the set Ginger Rogers rushed to the "Alice Adams" set while waiting for her own setup. Ginger watched Hepburn and sighed deeply. Later, Betty Furness was admitted to the set. She stood wide-eyed. She also sighed deeply.

Miss Furness is a charming gal, and it is easy to understand why she has a new boy friend practically every week. I told Miss Furness that the only thing that I really knew about her was that some one was always romancing her.

"I only do that to give you columnists material," she answered. "I think you're all swell guys."

Forgotten fact: "Alice Adams" won the Pulitzer Prize for the best novel in 1922—in those days the Pulitzer award wasn't the booby prize.

Estelle Taylor returned from the San Diego Fair with Lee Tracy, and now it's practically impossible to see one without the other . . . Gregory Ratoff carts the cans of film of his English-made pictures with him wherever he goes.

Gregory will rush into any vacant projection room to show you the flicker. Every time he shows it, it costs him $10. The picture has practically cost him more to show than it did to make . . . An exhibitor wrote to Twentieth Century wanting to know why they abbreviated the first name of "Les Miserables."

A NEW trick lingo—at least, it's new to me, but it's well-known to any actor who played in Australia—is the Australian slang that Director Lloyd Bacon slings at his actors. They claim that after you work in one picture for Bacon you understand and toss about this slang. Here are a few: Bacon said to Cagney: "In this scene you wear the whip and lash, and then you walk over to the near and far, order a gay and frisky, and give the bartender the bees and honey."

Now what Bacon said to Cagney is: "In this scene you wear a mustache, and then you walk over to the bar and order a whisky, and pay the bartender the money." If you'd like to read a few more words of this lingo: Mince pies means eyes. East and west means mouth. Twist and twirl means girl. Cigarette is one regret, and storm and strife means wife.

And mentioning the word wife, Lyda Roberti told several players in "The Big Broadcast" that she was going to marry Bud Ernst this month.

Anyone who works for Sam Goldwyn is known as an "S. G. Man" . . . George S. Kaufman and Max Siegel made the trip to Hollywood together, and the most amusing incident which Kaufman relates is about going into the dining car for breakfast at a quarter to eleven, and after eating breakfast and leaving the diner to learn that it was only a quarter to ten . . . Thelma Todd has returned to her former big romance, Harvery Preister, an insurance man.

IT WAS interesting to sit in a projection room and watch the silent flicker "Robin Hood," with Douglas Fairbanks. As George Haight remarked, after the first 15 minutes you become accustomed to the fact that it isn't a talkie, and it is really remarkable how well this old flicker holds up. "Robin Hood" is 12 years old, and it couldn't be released today, for audiences would certainly insist that certain sequences were stolen from pictures which they have seen during the last year. There is the scene in "Robin Hood" in which Richard the Lion Hearted rushes about slapping stickers on people, which was in that racy comedy, "Twentieth Century." There is the torture scene in "Robin Hood" in which long wooden splinters are pushed under the fingernails of a character, which was used in that exciting flicker, "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." There is the comedy scene in "Robin Hood" in which Wallace Beery sits at a banquet table, holding a lamb in his paws and eating it, which was also in "The Private Life of Henry VIII."

The new Grace Moore flicker, "Love Me Forever," was previewed the other evening, but it isn't fair to pass judgment on it yet. The picture was plenty overlength and needs trimming, which is the reason for the tryout. Then, in Miss Moore's big sequence, the singing of "La Boheme," Michael Bartlett, who will be a sensation, hit a high note and a tube blew out in the projection booth, spoiling the recording of this number.

However, there is a typical Hollywood gesture in "Love Me Forever;" the quartet from "Rigoletto" is sung by 40 voices.

Damage Is $10,000 In Navy Yard Fire

Power House Threatened by Coal Blaze.

Damage done by fire which early yesterday destroyed a bin, a quantity of coal and threatened the power house at the Navy Yard, was placed at between $10,000 and $12,000 by officers last night.

The fire brought equipment from all parts of the city. Combustion in the coal caused the blaze, firemen said.

For hours, until 7 a. m., the firemen played streams of water on the 100,000-ton bin. Marines stood guard over the shops while firemen fought the blaze.

REVOLUTION IN GIN DISTILLING!

"Controlled Condensation" Developed by Hiram Walker Assures Uniform Gin Flavor

300-Year-Old Gin Problem Solved

For more than 300 years people have wondered why gin should be smooth one time and not so smooth the next.

You yourself, for example, have often mixed your favorite cocktail, using the same proportions as usual, without getting the same results as usual.

Neither you nor your recipe are to blame—it's the gin. For, contrary to popular belief, good gin is the most difficult liquor in the world to make!

Juniper berries, coriander seed, sweet orange peel and other essential gin ingredients, vary in flavor not only from each other—but also from themselves!

Nobody Need Ever Complain Again!

For 300 years, all that the finest gin formula could do was to control the proportions of the ingredients . . . but Hiram Walker's "C.C." Process actually controls the flavor variations of these ingredients! It eliminates the danger of any one flavor "running wild" and coming through too strong!

This remarkable "C. C." Process, in use since the opening of Hiram Walker's Peoria distillery, a year ago, enables you to buy, mix, serve and taste a gin so smooth and so perfectly balanced, that nobody need ever complain of variations in flavor. For Hiram Walker has added to the world's most famous formula for flavor, the world's most important process for uniformity.

No Extra Cost to You

Hiram Walker's London Dry Gin is distilled from grain spirits—a very important distinction to remember in gin. And the "C.C." Process is an assurance of flavor perfection day in and day out, in the bottle you buy any day! It will pay you to insist upon this world-famous gin—it costs no more.

Garden Party Held at Home Of the Erwins

Several Hundred Present at Affair in Rock Creek Park Estate.

Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Carr Among Guests.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Arbremont, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Persons Erwin in Rock Creek Park, was the scene of a delightful tea and garden party yesterday. The estate is one of the loveliest in Washington, with its fine old Georgian house and beautiful formal gardens, spreading lawns and the swimming pool, of blue tiles, hidden from the rest of the gardens by tall hedges of blue spruce trees and rhododendron bushes.

The guests spent the afternoon wandering through the gardens or gathered in groups around the buffets arranged in a grove of trees not far from the house. There Mrs. Erwin received her guests. She wore a gown of champagne-colored net, fashioned with a long, flowing skirt, and a cape shoulder line. The girdle was of blue velvet, and cascading from it were field flowers appliqued to the frock. Her hat was of the same shade and was trimmed with a small bunch of field flowers. On the beautiful green grass, blue carpet had been placed, and a Philippine fan chair, where the hostess rested after receiving several hundred guests.

Assisting Mrs. Erwin were her mother, Mrs. Delos A. Blodgett, who wore a gown of chiffon printed with delicate colors, and a large leghorn hat; Mrs. Charles Matthews, aunt of the hostess, who was in a printed chiffon with a hat of pale shell pink, banded with lavender and green; Mrs. Willard Smith, a cousin of Mrs. Erwin, who is visiting from her home in Glen Rock, N. J.; Mrs. David Gaillard, sister of the hostess, and her mother-in-law, Mrs. David duBose Gaillard.

The two young daughters of the hosts, Eileen and Hope Erwin, also were assisting. They wore frocks of white lawn printed with field flowers and belted with bright red, and ribbons of red tied in their dark curls. The son of the house, young Hal Erwin, was "master of ceremonies" in a suit of white linen trimmed with navy blue. The children were guides to the nearby kennels, where they showed with pride their Great Dane and several other dogs.

Among the guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. Fredric D. McKenney, the latter in a trailing gown of blue and white chiffon with a large black hat; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Taliaferro, the latter wearing a frock of black and white plaid taffeta, with a large black hat; the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, Mrs. Carr in a gown of pink and navy blue printed chiffon with a pink hat and a cape of navy blue; Mr. Frederick Gibbs, Mr. George Williams, Mr. Mason Remey, Miss Eleanor Connelly, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Langlais and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Langlais; former Representative and Mrs. Frank W. Ellis, Dr. and Mrs. James Alexander Lyon, Mr. John Leibert, Mr. Julius Garfinckel, Mr. and Mrs. Cabot Stevens, Mrs. James Ellwood Jones, Mrs. Effingham Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ash, the latter in an afternoon frock of deep blue lace with a large white hat banded with the same shade of blue, and Dr. James Emory.

Curtis Gardens Open in Benefit Next Tuesday

Long Island Estate Has Some of World's Most Famous Roses.

The gardens of Willowmere, estate of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Curtis, at Roslyn, Long Island, will be opened Tuesday afternoon for the benefit of the Roslyn District Nursery Association, of which Mrs. Harold Godwin is president. Many rare flowers will be on view, but the internationally famous rose gardens will be the primary attraction.

Mrs. Curtis has been at her Long Island home for several weeks, having closed her house here, but her activities are always of interest to Capital society. Two years ago Willowmere was the scene of the wedding of Miss Laura Curtis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis, to young, "Pete" Bostwick, noted gentleman jockey.

Admiral Aaron Ward, former owner of Willowmere, specialized in roses, and made annual trips to France to visit M. Pernet, that country's authority, to bring back new varieties. Once M. Pernet sent several rose bushes to Willowmere to be tested. The best were a dark pink rose which he named "Constance" after Admiral Ward's daughetr; an Indian yellow rose which he called "Mrs. Aaron Ward," and an orange pink rose which he named the "Willowmere." A deep red rose, considered by M. Pernet to be the best of all, he named the "Admiral Ward."

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have maintained the entire garden, which is old English in plan, as it was laid out by Admiral and Mrs. Ward. Featured in addition to the roses are tree peonies, parrot tulips, English hybrid clematis, and an old wisteria arbor. A double English hawthorne tree, surrounded by English elms and walnut trees, is more than 300 years old.

Miss Catherine Elizabeth Bullough, sister of the bride, was her only attendant. Her dress was of pink chiffon, she wore a large pink horsehair hat to match and carried briarcliff roses and blue delphinium.

The best man was Mr. William Reed Bullough, brother of the bride. The ushers included Mr. Luther C. Steward, jr., Mr. George Holt, Mr. Joseph R. Mattare and Mr. Arthur Payne.

Immediately after the ceremony a breakfast for the family and bridal party was served at the Dodge Hotel.

Business Woman Thinks Shops Should Keep Open 2 Nights a Week.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: One of these days I intend to write you a letter devoted to an attempt to express how fine I think your column. Your advice on vital questions must be of inestimable value and comfort to those who know not which way to turn, to say nothing of its broadening influence on the sympathies of those of us who live relatively serene lives.

• • • •

This letter, however, is to indorse the suggestion made May 28 by "Mary Jones," that shops and department stores keep open in the evenings.

I have often wished that some stagger-hour plan could be devised, without hardship of hours to the store clerks, whereby office women could have an opportunity to shop with more or less leisure.

• • • •

It is true that in Washington the average Government clerk is supposed to be free after 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon; that she may obtain "leave of absence" if she cares to. But there are many women outside of the Federal departments, in congressional offices and other offices, who find it almost impossible to shop.

• • • •

A conscientious secretary or stenographer does not wish to risk absence during such times as a busy chief may be in need of her particular services. To get from Capitol Hill to the shopping district is sometimes an ordeal in itself. If one has a car, the parking problem must be considered. If one uses a street car the waits may be as long as 15 or 20 minutes—this I know from actual experience.

• • • •

There is no time or mood for well-ordered shopping under these circumstances, and a woman with fastidious tastes as to color schemes, suitable styles and materials, is definitely handicapped. In desperation she sometimes pays more than she can afford for something which afterward proves unsuitable.

• • • •

If the stores and shops were open two evenings a week—at least during busy seasons—with certain Friday bargain offerings of interest to business women, offered for sale at 6 o'clock in the evening (if such a plan is practicable) it would, indeed, prove a blessing to a large group of would-be patrons. Sincerely yours.

ELEANOR ADAMS.

Who Will Bell Cat?

DEAR ELEANOR: You are more than kind to express the belief that this column "must be of . . . value and comfort to those who know not which way to turn." Such, indeed, is its reason for being, and, judging from the steadily increasing volume of mail which reaches this desk—much of which requires personal answer—there is a great human need for the attentive ear and sympathetic spirit willing to help when possible.

• • • •

You have ably indorsed "Mary Jones'" proposal that department stores and shops invite the trade of the tired business woman by making it possible for her to shop of evenings. If evidence can be produced—in the way of a general indorsement of the idea from responsible salaried women—to convince merchants they are literally slamming their shop doors in the face of hundreds of would-be customers, overlooking the development of a field rich in spending potentialities, certainly they should prove willing to effect some practicable plan which would work to mutual benefit.

• • • •

Isn't there some business or professional woman's group which might be willing to sponsor a campaign to that end? Some organization of women Federal employes, or of secretaries and stenographers? Why not take your proposition to such a group and ask them to get behind it?

• • • •

Every existing civic project now reacting to the general good was inaugurated by some person who possessed enough enterprise to start the ball rolling; who wasn't content to sit idly by, hoping that Jack or Jane would do it. Why don't you and "Mary Jones" get together? I should be glad to effect an introduction, if she is willing.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Women's Conventions Alert To National Problems Despite Inevitable Solos, Dry Reports

By Malvina Lindsay,
Woman's Page Editor.

WOMEN'S CONVENTIONS, charges Anna Steese Richardson, writer and interpreter of club women, are given over to club platitudes and club courtesies. "It's the same old stuff we've had for 30 years," she writes in the current issue of the Woman's Home Companion, "the same contralto singer, the same sightseeing trips, the same processions of presidents, the same reports, the same old blah."

• • • •

Mrs. Richardson is right and women should take her criticism to heart and reform their procedure. Nevertheless they should be handed a few bouquets for the progress they have already made in convention technique as compared to men.

• • • •

Right or not, the idea has developed in this country that men's conventions are little more than oportunities for husbands to get away from home and get drunk. "There are no wives with us," has long been a favorite selection of strolling quartets at men's conclaves and it is deeply expressive of the delegates' sense of escape, not only from their wives, but from their home towns, the old ladies next door, the whole web of convention in which they find their lives entangled.

THAT WOMEN do not feel the urge to go out and paint red their convention cities might indicate they were less restrained at home than their husbands, or that the call of the wild was less strong in their breasts. Yet probably no one knows the fetters of routine, the cords of convention more than the housewife. No one rebels more fiercely against the petty drabness of every-day living than does the average woman whose life at best is more circumscribed than that of her husband.

• • • •

If ever anyone had a good excuse for letting loose and making whoopee it is the woman who attends a club convention. That she does not do so is a tribute to her maturity and also her good taste. Whatever vanities of corsages and fluttering chiffons she may indulge in, whatever time she may waste in sightseeing trips and annual reports, it must be remembered that she does not clown in hotel lobbies, make dates with waiters who serve her, ogle strange and personable young men, sing on street corners, stagger to her room at 3 a. m., or keep her fellow guests awake until morning.

• • • •

However, these things are inconsequential beside the outstanding difference between men's and women's conventions—a difference of social outlook. Take the programs of any of the national women's groups that are holding conventions at this season. What topics are being discussed? Social security, public health, education, unemployment, world peace—everything that is related to the reconstruction of a world awry. Yet the average men's convention relates itself generally to the question, "How can I make more money—how can my special group find its place in the sun?"

NATURALLY, one would expect women's cultural and civic groups to devote their attention to altruistic matters. Yet these groups are not the only ones who are showing an alert interest in the problems of the day. Women's business and professional organizations are earnestly giving thought—and place on their convention programs—to national problems that are only indirectly related to their immediate goals.

• • • •

Men's conventions, often as a sop to humanitarianism, announce programs of charitable relief for their members or decide to found orphan homes. But women's groups with native feminine realism, have awakened to the fact that public problems affecting not one, but all groups of people, have got to be grappled with sooner or later.

• • • •

It is unfortunate that the attainment of these high goals of women's organizations should be impeded by such clogs in the machinery as "contralto singers and processions of presidents." But at least these women have attained the broader vision, have wakened up to what is going on in the world. At least they seem to be able to regard a convention as something more than an escape from husbands and dishpans.

Entertain the Saturday Night Crowd With a 'Come-Into-the-Kitchen' Party

When the last trump is played, lure your guests into the kitchen for bread board refreshments and a tall glass of punch. This is an attractive arrangement from the hostess' as well as the guests' point of view.

Table Laden With Meats, Cheese, Relishes Will Invite Foraging.

By Dorothea Duncan.

IF IT is your turn to entertain the Saturday night crowd at your house this week-end plan a "come-into-the-kitchen" party. After the last hand of bridge, lure your guests into the kitchen for refreshments. It is the kind of a party that any hostess can enjoy as much as her guests, because it calls for little preparation, no serving, and very litle straightening up afterward.

Deck the kitchen table out with your gayest cloth and napkins to match. Scrub your largest wooden board until it shines, for this is to be your sandwich tray. Along the center of the tray place a row of little dishes or bowls. These can be filled with mayonnaise, peanut butter, cheese or relish spreads. Arrange alternately rows of cheese and cold meat on either side of the bowls. At the end of the tray place rows of bread, rye, whole wheat and white. If the bread has already been spread with butter so much the better. Fill a large, wooden salad bowl with sliced tomatoes and lettuce and a smaller one with radishes and spring onions. Add pepper and salt to the already assembled ingredients and a good supply of butterspreaders. Flank either side of the tray with rows of tall glasses filled with crushed ice and a delicious peppy punch. Add a pitcher of punch for every one will want seconds. Now let guests in and tell them to get busy. Whatever they see is theirs' for the taking.

You will want this recipe for party punch.

Party Punch.

4 cups sugar
8 cups water
Juice of 12 lemons
4 cups pineapple juice
2 cups canned crushed pineapple
24 maraschino cherries, quartered
Orange and lemon slices
4 pints carbonated water

Boil sugar and water together 10 minutes. Cool. Add fruit juices and crushed pineapple. Chill. Just before serving, add cherries, fruit slices and carbonated water. Pour immediately over ice. Makes about 6 quarts of punch.

Here is a recipe for another type of punch.

Ginger Punch.

1 quart water
1 cup sugar
¾ cup chopped Canton ginger
¼ cup ginger sirup
1 cup orange juice
¼ cup lemon juice
1 quart charged water.

Boil water, sugar, ginger and ginger sirup for 20 minutes. Cool. Add fruit juices and charged water gradually. Pour over cracked ice and garnish with a sprig of mint.

Toasted Coconut Bisque.

3 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
2 cups milk
1-3 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons light corn sirup
2 tablespoons sugar
2 egg whites
1 cup cream, whipped
1½ teaspoons vanilla
1 cup shredded coconut, toasted and crumbled

Add tapioca to milk in top of double boiler. Place over rapidly boiling water, bring to scalding point (allow 3 to 5 minutes), cook 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Strain hot mixture on 1-3 cup sugar, salt and corn sirup, stirring (not rubbing) through very fine sieve. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Chill. Add 2 tablespoons sugar to egg whites, beat until stiff; fold into cold tapioca. Fold in cream, vanilla and coconut. Freeze rapidly in trays of automatic refrigerator, 3 to 4 hours. Makes 1 quart.

What TODAY Means

"Gemini."

IF JUNE 7 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:15 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:15 to 10:15 a. m., from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m. and from 9:15 to 11:15 p. m.

It will be wise to go out of your way to avoid quarreling on June 7, as the loss by indulging in it will be greater than any possible gain. Be tactful in saying anything of an unpleasant nature. Should you have any instructions to give, or repeat, be most explicit, leaving nothing to the imagination, so as to prevent the possibility of a misunderstanding. In the realm of the business world, influences are likely to make outside of office activities more productive than inside work.

Social affairs of the conventional type will probably meet with greater success than those attempted along pretentious lines requiring lavish expenditures. Married and engaged couples, as well as those anxious to ask the momentous question, should be careful to regulate all their actions with discretion on this date, as a disregard of it is liable to lead to complications.

If a woman, and June 7 is your birthday, you are inclined to judge people, and things in general, by outward or external appearances. If you will strive to get a clearer, as well as a more profound intellectual understanding of life as a whole, your progress forward will be rapid.

If a man, and June 7 is your natal day, if you will build firmly and well, you will succeed. The most important thing for you to guard against is a tendency to be impatient.

Comins Has Ideas on Decorating Home

Artist Suggests Air Ducts in Grille Shape Instead of Fireplace.

FIREPLACES are incongruous in modern homes. Bookcases are horrible. Tie-back curtains are hideous. And a light in the center of the ceiling is nothing short of barbarous. Who says so? Eben F. Comins, famed painter of portraits and frescoes, with a studio at 1611 Connecticut avenue.

Artist Comins, a fine figure of a man who flavors his speech with pungent humor, believes most persons know how to create well only two rooms—the kitchen and bathroom.

"All the rest of the house is usually mongrel," he said yesterday in his big, light-walled studio. "It's fortunate money is scarce or most homes would be even worse than they are. In prosperous times several servants were employed to dust heavily carved furniture and knick-knacks. They seldom got the corners clean, but that's neither here nor there. The important thing is that lack of money is forcing most families now to get along with only one servant, or in many cases with no servant at all, which has led to the removal of articles that catch or create dust."

But, according to Mr. Comins, fireplaces should have gone out with heavily carved furniture and knick-knacks.

Dislikes Dancing Flames.

"They're out of place, out of date," he said. "They're a hangover from primitive times when people clustered around them for heat, not for conversation. Coal and wood fires are dirty and unsanitary. They don't belong in the simplified, modern structures we are creating today."

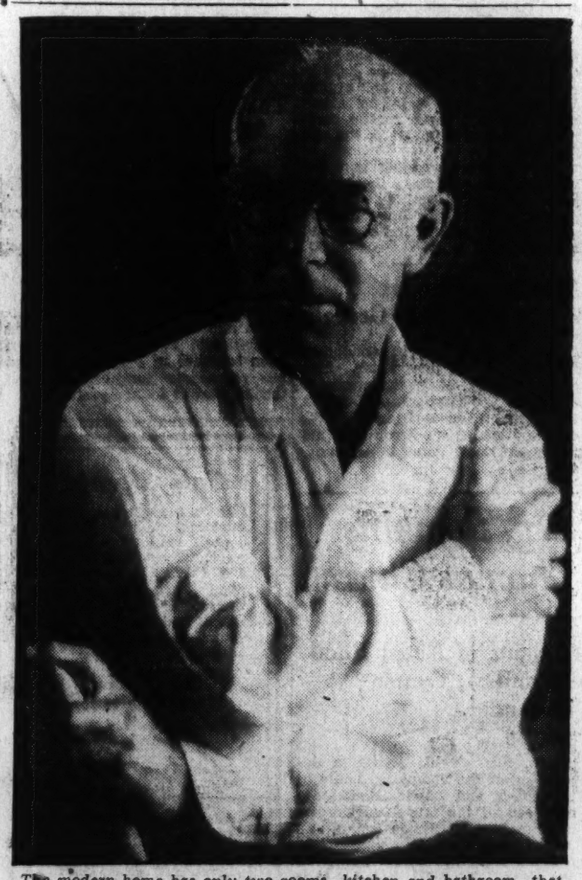
Mr. Comins admits dancing flames may have a certain attraction for some people. But not for him; they're too giggly and nervous. He thinks there is something much better—a recessed panel from floor to ceiling with a hot and cold air duct behind it. He suggests the panel be made of perforated crystal glass, semi-opaque and engraved with designs in colors. The effect would be that of a grille.

The walls, with the exception of the colored glass grille should be bare, the artist believes.

"Well-placed, well-proportioned spaces are never really bare," he declared. "So I prefer no pictures. But if you must have one consult a good decorator who will put you in touch with an artist. The artist will then paint the right picture for your room. Reaching the artist through the interior decorator on the staff of a department store is our most valuable method for encouraging modern art."

The way most people buy any old picture and stick it up in their home is positively pathetic, Mr. Comins believes.

"Why," he asked, "should a sunny mountain or an old windmill picture fit a room? If you can't get the right picture made especially your room it's much better to have none at all. If you are determined to buy ready-made wall decorations the safest things are paintings from China and Japan."



The modern home has only two rooms—kitchen and bathroom—that win the approval of Artist Eben S. Comins. Other rooms, he points out, are disfigured by such "atrocities" as fireplaces, ceiling lights and book cases.

A good Chinese painting, according to Mr. Comins, contains enough of the laws of color and design to add beauty to any home. And Chinese carvings, to use his own words, "make marvelous decorations."

"But really," he went on, "only three decorations are necessary for any home: portable lighting, that is to say, lamps; books, but not in bookcases; they make a home look too much like a horrible little public library; a few books scattered about are quite enough and reveal the owner's taste. And then the crowning feature, flowers. There should be flowers and flowers and more flowers. Even one little bowl of them in the simple modern room counts for more than the myriad knick-knacks which cluttered up the old."

Prefers Benches to Sofas.

Portable lamps are one of Artist Comins' major enthusiasms in planning modern decoration.

"They make strange and interesting shadows," he said. "They give a room mystery, and people love mystery. Lamplight also makes a room seem larger and reveals only those things you want to see or to be seen. And it makes that barbarous center ceiling light totally unnecessary."

Mr. Comins has no objection to modern furniture; in fact, he enjoys it because it is simple and sanitary. "Though I'm not keen on sofas," he explained. "Benches are much more attractive. They can be built in or be made movable with the addition of casters. Covered with good rugs or a fine textile they make delightful places to stretch out upon. And that's important. We've sat at right angles since time immemorial and it will do us good to sprawl a little now and then."

the floors as dark as possible, he is convinced. And windows may have curtains. "But not tie-backs," he shuddered. "They make an ugly line. And why do people call curtains drapes? Drapery is a good old word. Curtain is even better. But drapes! Ugh! I wonder how that horrible word ever came into being."

Suddenly the artist smiled.

"I suppose all of this sounds iconoclastic," he said. "After all, the owners of homes have a right to decorate them just as they please. They must express their own taste no matter how bad or good it may be. Our present economic conditions are bringing simple purity into our homes and living."

Higher Allotments For Women Urged

Money given by the City of New York to unattached women on relief barely covers the cost of rent and food, leaving no margin for car fare, toothpaste, soap and other necessities, Mrs. Walter Nelson Sedgwick, president of the City Federation Hotel, pointed out at the recent anniversary luncheon of the hotel's directors.

The women, according to Mrs. Sedgwick, receive only $3 a week for rent and $2.25 for food. This allows them nothing for clothing. Nor does it allow a nickel for car fare, which makes it almost impossible for them to go job hunting in a city as large as New York.

Latest Fashion In Nail Polish Now Available

It Comes in Three Shades and Is Made With Cream Base.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HERE'S warning! Put away your deep nail polishes this summer if you want to stay on the smart side of things. Turn your attention to the light, bright shades. Try shell pink with your diaphanous chiffons; bright pink with your prints and vivid clothes, or lacquer with an orange cast if your hands are sun kissed. Now is the time to be winsome and gay—so away with those winter perfumes and heavy, exotic enamels.

A well-known beauty expert, quite in the spirit of spring and summer fashions, brings out three delectable, pinky shades of polish made with a cream base. These are incomparable for hiding tiny nail blemishes and still not making the nails look opaque.

"Shell," "Pomegranate" and "Cardinal" are their names. "Shell" is delicately pink like a certain type of luscious-looking bonbon. "Pomegranate" is a "fleshy" pink, sure to be just right with your summer tailleur.

"Cardinal" is frankly bold and bright and seems to have been invented to bring out the beauty of the brilliant flower tones in the new summer prints. With these polishes you may vary the intensity of your nails to suit your frocks.

Four outstanding features make these polishes readily acceptable to discriminating women. First of all, the enamels spread quickly, without streaking, so that in a stroke or two the entire nail is covered smoothly. Secondly, they do not deteriorate after the bottle has been opened and the cap replaced. If you use up your polish in a reasonable length of time, you'll find that it will be as clear for the last manicure as for the first. Thirdly, the polishes do not buckle, peel off, or change color on the nail. They are really dependable! Fourthly, the odor is neutral. Many women will find this a decided point in their favor.

You may buy the cream enamel in a combination kit with an excellent oily remover or you can buy it separate, as you please.

Bargain in Perfumes.

The modest little violet shouldn't be a bit bashful about accepting the honors this season. According to reports from local toilet goods departments, floral fragrances in perfumes and toilet waters are literally the rage, and one of the most popular is the violet.

A French cosmetic house puts out an exceedingly fine sachet and toilet water redolent with violet fragrance. Ordinarily the combination of the two would set you back exactly $1.75. Now, however, you find them offered as an extra special bargain for only $1.

Formula for the Bath.

Granted that nothing, not even a mint julep, is more refreshing on a warm day than a luxurious bath. A certain beautician who has many beauty secrets right at her finger tips says few things are more conducive, to that calm, rested look, which in itself is a basis of beauty and much to be sought by all beauty aspirants.

This beautician says it isn't necessary to devote 30 to 40 minutes to the bath to turn it into a real luxury. She outlines a 15-minute schedule which she declares will turn a mere bath into a rare treat if followed exactly. Here it is:

7 p. m.—Returns from the club—hot, tired, dusty. Runs bath, adds a few drops of an invigorating bath essence. Inhales fragrance, and knows that evening will be a success after all.

7:05 p. m.—Lies blissfully back in the scented bath, fairly feeling the weariness and petty annoyances of the day oozing out of her toes.

7:15 p. m.—Steps out of the tub feeling like a different person. Reaches for her flacon of eau de cologne—if it's the right kind it will be cool, refreshing, and will leave the skin soft and silky. This followed by a bath powder scented with fragrant fresh water lily buds leaves her purring with pleasure. And now for a dash of certain similarly scented deodorant talc—just to be sure!

Superfluous Hair.

Query—I am troubled with superfluous hair around the mouth. Would you advise me how to correct this condition? While the hair is very fine in texture and I keep it bleached, thought perhaps it would be advisable to have it removed permanently if possible.

If I have it removed by electrolysis—would like the most expert treatment possible. Could you recommend someone who is very thorought in the line of work.

MRS. R. D.

Answer—If this superfluous hair is inconspicuous, thanks to the bleaching, I certainly would not bother to have anything done to it. If, however, it causes you embarrassment, write, inclosing self-addressed stamped envelope and we will be glad to give you the name of several good specialists in this line of work.

Cotton Evening Frocks And Wraps Worn in Paris

Nothing is more effective for the cotton evening gown than white lace, which always imparts an air of fragile femininity. The model at left is appropriate for either afternoon or evening. Note the graceful lines of the short puff sleeves, also the modern touch in the shirtwaist collar. The scarf is of cherry red velvet.

Models Displayed Include White Pique Splashed With Red Poppies, Finished With Red Oilcloth Belt.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 6.—Cotton evening frocks, wraps and daytime jackets are Paris' last offering in summer styles. LeLong showed them in his midseason collection in crisp linens and piques.

Among his evening frocks were a white pique splashed with red poppies finished with a red oilcloth belt, a black linen printed in red, white and green flowers and having a hem edged in white organdy and a white pique printed in red and black swirls. All were designed with skirts which swept into soft fullness below the knee.

With these and even more formal frocks of net and crepe went hip-bone-length capes of white pique or white organdy.

The same white pique made hip-length capes and long coats to accompany dark daytime frocks, one of the smartest models of a tailored coat fastened with gold coin buttons. A trim suit of creamy yellow pique had a jacket closed with square buttons set with multi-colored square stones.

Printed crepes, patterned in basket weaves or looped ribbon designs instead of flowers, made a number of smart outfits for town wear in hot weather. The frocks were generally designed with fairly high draped, necklines, give eighth-length draped sleeves and fairly ample skirts accompanied by hip-length capes or short-sleeved full-backed three-quarter-length coats. One costume of dark red and white basket patterned crepe had a vest of deep red crinkled red crepe attached to the crepe, while a navy crepe patterned in a beige ribbon design had a three-quarter swagger coat fastened at the neckline with a silver leaf.

Glamorous evening frocks for town wear were fashioned of tulle and mousseline and accompanied by little wraps of their own.

Changes in Food Habits Reported Due to Research

The eating habits of the entire Nation have been changed as a result of three discoveries, according to Prof. R. Adams Dutcher, of Pennsylvania State College, Science Service reports.

The first discovery was that proteins from milk, eggs and meat are more nourishing than proteins from vegetables. The second concerned the importance of mineral salts in the diet. And the third revealed the necessity of some of the rarer elements such as iodine, copper, manganese, and even zinc in the diet.

The reason proteins from milk, eggs, and meat are so valuable is their amino acid content, Prof. Dutcher pointed out. This acid acts as building stones for body tissues.

The importance of mineral salts was proved by tests which showed this problem could not be left to take care of itself even when proteins, fats and carbohydrates were present in large quantities.

Find the Setting Trick.

THE first most important consideration in defensive play is always to find the setting trick.

A play which is not obvious but which should be learned by every player caused the defeat of declarer's contract in the following hand:

North, Dealer
North-South vulnerable tricks,

The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
Pass	1♣(1)	Pass(2)	1◇
Pass	1♠(3)	Pass	2NT
Pass	3NT	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—In most cases three honor-tricks are required for an opening bid, except when the hand contains a rebiddable suit. An exception is made, however, in the case of hands which are strong in the major suits.

2—Because of his vulnerability, South must be chary of over-calling.

The Play.

In spite of West's diamond bid, North chose the four of diamonds as his opening lead. South won the trick with the Ace. South now could hardly consider a diamond continuation because West was marked with a five-card suit and it was very unlikely the setting tricks could be found in that suit. The logical shift was therefore to hearts. But in leading hearts South had to consider that five tricks were necessary to defeat the contract. Since dummy had hearts stopped, the contract could not be defeated unless North could find an entry.

West now counted his tricks and found that he could win three in spades, two in clubs and one in diamonds, in addition to the heart trick he had already won. Two additional winners were required and they could be established in either the club or the diamond suit. While he could have established diamonds more easily, it would have been necessary to let North in; whereas this could be avoided if South held either of the missing club honors.

Irradiation of Food Provides Vitamin D To Counteract Rickets, Cutter Explains

Ergosterol, in Cod Liver Oil, Supplies the Vital Ingredient.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

COD liver oil as a household remedy has been used for many generations. More than a hundred years ago it was recommended as a sovereign cure for rickets. Just how the oil brought about a deposit of lime in the bones remained a puzzle until 1922 when McCollum and others proved that the oil contained a separate and distinct principle now known as vitamin D. It was then shown that this substance mobilized forces having to do with the growth of bone.

A few years earlier another investigator had exposed children suffering from rickets to ultraviolet light, and it was observed that marked improvement and finally cure followed this procedure. It was then concluded that the action of vitamin D and of ultraviolet light was the same. In other words, both agencies produced healing in rickets.

Then came a rather startling announcement by Steenbock and his coworkers to the effect that foods could be exposed to ultraviolet light, which exposure would endow them with properties that would counteract rickets. From certain other experiments it was found that if a peculiar substance called ergosterol is irradiated (exposed to ultraviolet light) the substance actually represents vitamin D. Ergosterol is present in cod liver oil in small amounts. It also exists in the skin. Wherever the skin is exposed to ultraviolet the ergosterol is rendered active, hence either procedure will lead to the production of a substance that will cure rickets.

Nearly All Foods Can be Rayed.

The question then arose as to how far we could carry the irradiation of foods and render them more potent as to their vitamin D content. It was found that nearly all food products could be rayed and the result was an increased production of vitamin D. The amount, however, varied with the percentage of ergosterol in the food. Naturally perishable foods—meats, vegetables and fruits—are not suitable for irradiation, but cereals, biscuits and bread are. Breakfast cereals, particularly, lend themselves readily to the process.

Extensive tests of some of these irradiated foods were conducted and it was found that practically all contained an appreciable amount of vitamin D. Through rat feeding experiments McCollum showed that with irradiated biscuits, for example, the amount of mineral salts in the bones was increased from 33 to 48 per cent.

Experiments Show How Bread May Be Made More Nourishing.

Bread Irradiated Cheaply.

From an economic point of view bread, if it could be irradiated cheaply, would be an exceedingly valuable source of vitamin D. In order to avoid excessive cost it was found that instead of irradiating the flour before manufacture, or the loaf after baking, the shortening and the yeast could be exposed to ultraviolet with the result that vitamin D was produced in definite quantities. By this means a loaf of bread can be raised in vitamin D potency equal to three teaspoonsful of cod liver oil.

Any food that can be prepared with irradiated yeast or with irradiated exgosterol will prove salutary in the treatment of rickets. It has been shown that after irradiation the vitamin D power of yeast is 100 times greater than that of cod liver oil, and ergosterol can be treated so that its vitamin D potency is 250,000 times that of cod liver oil.

Guide Scouts To Help Shrine At Convention

200 Will Get Training for Jamboree Doing Messenger Work.

Jamboree guides will get their preliminary experience during the Shrine convention. About 200 Scouts have been asked to assist the Shrine rooming service in showing visitors to their rooms in various parts of the city. Another 150 Scouts will act as ushers in the stands during the three parades; and still another group of 25 experienced first-aid Scouts will act as stretcher bearers at the Red Cross stations.

The one-day trip to Camp Roosevelt Saturday needs only fair weather to assure the greatest attendance since these affairs were inaugurated several years ago. The headquarters office is remaining open Friday night to get last-minute bus reservations. Many of the troops are providing their own transportation, but those needing transportation may go by buses which leave the Zero Milestone at 9 o'clock Saturday morning and will return about 6.

Camporee Data Incomplete.

Camporee results are still incomplete, but the records thus far indicate that nearly 150 patrols participated in these overnight camping contests. The Standard Camper Award given for qualification in camporees will be presented at the Court of Award to be held Saturday evening, June 15, at the Powell Junior High School.

The guide rally, which constitutes the first session of the guide training course, will be held at 6:30 p. m. Saturday, June 15, at Powell Junior immediately preceding the Court of Award. Mr. Harvey Gordon, national camping engineer, in charge of jamboree arrangements in Washington, will tell of the latest developments in the jamboree. Following this session the course will be continued in the various troops. However, the council training committee, under Dr. William T. McClosky, will continue training each Saturday evening for Eagle Scouts and all Scouters.

The qualifications for a guide in the jamboree are that a boy be a registered Scout and pass the guide quiz. Age, rank in scouting, or size will not be considered in selecting guides.

Registrations for the jamboree are being received daily in the local office and the full quota allotted to the District of Columbia will probably be filled.

Camp Roosevelt Free of Debt.

Camp Roosevelt will start its seventeenth season on Junt 24, free of debt. Through the efforts of the council vice president, Julius Garfinckel, the deed to the last additional 50 acres has been turned over to the council.

Troop 40 staged a father and son and brother hike last week in Rock Creek Park. A three-cornered baseball game was a feature.

First aid patrols are being recruited for service at Marshall Hall this summer.

Troop 97's first aid Scouts, in the number of 25, gave service last Saturday in the marathon.

On June 22 Scouts from the Eastern section of the United States will make a pilgrimage to the home of the national Scout commissioner, Daniel Carter Beard, to help in the celebration of his eighty-fifth birthday. This action is planned as an expression of the deep appreciation and affection of the Boy Scouts of America for "Uncle Dan" for his long service to boyhood.

Holy Comforter Church Benefit.

Louis Nesline will be host at a benefit card party tonight in Holy Comforter Church auditorium, Fifteenth and East Capitol streets. Proceeds will go to the church building fund.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

June Night on Broadway.

New York, June 6.

Notes: The Greta Garbo taxi-cab picture, in which her face appears directly above some very comical promotion lettering, has the town in stitches . . . McLarnin's manager, alleging that Abe Lyman bet $10,000 on Barney Ross to beat Jimmy, evidently doesn't know Lyman's manager and watchdog of the exchequer, Bob Goldstein . . . For Lyman to get $10,000 from Bob, he'd have to show up with the bill of sale for the Empire State Building, attested by Al Smith—and even then I don't think Goldstein would let him have it . . . Toni Johnson and Ed Anderson are inseparable . . . Dinny Mahoney, head of the Detectives' Endowment Association, was one of the few Broadwayites invited to the Eddy Duchin-Marjorie Oelrich nuptials . . . Add New York Curios: Tax Appraiser Dave Soden, of Brooklyn, has visited the grave of John H. McCooey in Holy Cross Cemetery every week for the last year and a half (proving that there is such a thing as loyalty in politics) . . . Democratic primary fight between Magistrate Sabbatino and Peter J. Brancato for the county judgeship will hit a new high in furfying . . . There is an undertaker in New York named Apostle.

• • • •

It is 20 minutes before the curtain is to rise on Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book" at the historic Winter Garden . . . Lou Holtz, the comic, is standing in front of the theater with Jules Glaenzer, the small-town boy who made good in the big city, and is now vice president of Cartier's . . . Holtz wears a tan tweed suit, but lacks a tie to decorate his sweater-shirt . . . Glaenzer, immaculate in dinner jacket, looks as though he might have stepped out of one of his own show windows . . . "You look like a bum," Jules tells Holtz . . . "That makes me unutterably happy," said Holtz, "because in my heart I am a bum" . . . Al Jolson, in a blue serge suit, passes into the Winter Garden, where he first clicked big . . . Clara Bell Walsh, the richest of all Kentucky heiresses, arrives late in Row K . . . Beatrice Lillie leans forward interestedly when Sibyl Bowman does an impression of Bee's grandmaw.

• • • •

George White seats himself in an aisle seat . . . He denies he lost $30,000 at the race track . . . "As a matter of fact," he said, "I won $28," and the girl with him beams, as $28 is enough for a steak with noodles . . . Conrad Nagel marches in with Mary Alyce Rice . . . Best bit of the night is a clever audience "plant" While Ken Murray is engaged in a comedy card game on stage, he is about to make a bad move . . . A lady kibitzer in the audience screams: "No, No!" . . . Most of these audience "plants" betray themselves, but this one was terrific, if not colossal . . . She got a great laugh.

• • • •

Things I like in the show: The comedy of Ken Murray and his vaudeville stooges . . . The eye-arresting Jessie Draper, a blonde dancer, who reminds you of the velvety Marilyn Miller in appearance . . . The loose-jointed dancing of Sunny O'Dea . . . The amazing acrobatic dancing of two youngsters billed as the Hudson Wonders (their small-time tag is the only thing not big-time about 'em) . . . Things I Didn't Like: The concealing of the pit orchestra under the over-built stage (it made every number sound like a phonograph record) . . . The inexcusable clumsiness of the chorus girls, which resulted in a bad injury to one of them, Helen Marino, when her comrades piled on top of her.

• • • •

Later in the same evening, the opening night of the S. S. Normandie turned itself into the worst flop of the season . . . Instead of holding down their invitations to the premiere, and making it a truly swanky affair, the French Line must have ransacked the telephone directory for their invitation list . . . As a result, the confusion aboard was comparable to a rush at a bargain counter with everybody trampling over everyone else . . . How the boat itself appears, under normal conditions, I'll never know . . . It looked fairly gaudy in the glimpses I could get of it, with the theater offering the only note of restraint in decoration . . . It was a clumsily handled affair.

• • • •

No avenue in New York has quite the air of Madison . . . Lately the prim residents of this prissy boulevard have had the trolley cars removed, and now only the rubber-tired buses roll up and down, making no noise except when starting out of first gear . . . The shops on Madison have a certain Victorian correctness to them . . . Directly across from me is one that is typical . . . Neatly lettered on the awnings are the names of the owners: "Miss Lena—Miss Ellis" . . . Madison, in the Severe Sixties, is a slice of Boston transplanted to New York, and it is thoroughly charming.

• • • •

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

Most interesting air event today will come from WOL at 8:45 p. m. when Indian chiefs and princesses will broadcast a program of native ceremonial music. Chief Little Wolf, a Chippewa and champion hoop dancer of the Northwest, will dance to perpetuate "the Great Spirit" to the accompaniment of war cries and flutes. Chief Blow Snake, medicine man of the Winnebagos, will play a flute solo and sing his tribal "Morning Song," while 25 braves and squaws will present other musical features, including "The Church Song."

Tribes represented are Winnebago, Chippewa, Apache and Delaware. They will appear in the studio in full costume. These original Americans are living at the Indian camp ground near Mount Vernon.

WOL indicates they plan to present these broadcasts at frequent intervals throughout the summer.

Auditions for the Duchin contest were, on the whole better than expected. One big failing—too few singers presented suitable numbers, and were marked down because of that. You who may take auditions tonight, here's a word of warning. Listen to a couple of Duchin records to learn their style, pick songs that have a rhythmic swing. Don't bring any ballads. The judges may like them, but are forced to take into account the fact that your singing is not adaptable to Duchin music.

Dial twists:

Westminster Choral Festival on WRC, 4:30 p. m. Five thousand singers, representing choral groups in Eastern States, will participate in the festival, to be held under the auspices of the Westminster Choir School, of Princeton. Today's offering is Bach's Mass in B minor. WRC broadcasts only the last half of the program, so if you want the beginning of the Mass try WEAF, New York.

Gene Sarazen headlines the College Prom show, WMAL, 7:30 p. m.

Dolores del Rio, Pat O'Brien and Leo Carrillo give a radio adaptation of "In Caliente" on Hollywood Hotel, WJSV, 8 p. m.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, "Neutrality Legislation," WRC, 6:30 p. m.

William Green, "Labor and the New Deal," 10:30 p. m., WRC.

Arch McDonald will present Jack Dempsey on his program Monday. Dempsey will discuss the Klick-Canzoneri battle.

WJSV reports that its staff announcers are polishing up on their commercial plugs and getting generally excited about Henry J. Kaufman's award. They have until July 15 to polish, then the best will receive a prize in the form of a cup.

8,000 Virginia Miners to Quit In Nation-Wide Strike June 17

Work Goes Full Blast in Anticipation of Walkout.

Compromise With Employes Sought

Section Never Before Has Experienced General Strike.

By the Associated Press.

Norton, Va., June 6.—A Nation-wide strike call, set for June 17, will take about 8,000 Virginia miners from their work, mine operators and union leaders agreed today, unless some quick compromise is reached to avert the walkout.

All mines in the Virginia field are involved with the exception of 1,800 employed by the Clinchfield Coal Corporation which resisted the NRA demand for unionization of miners.

Anticipating a strike, every mine in the field is working at full time, and operators said the tempo would be maintained in an effort to continue capacity production until the end of the week.

In some quarters the hope was still held that some solution would be reached before June 17, even though it be nothing more than a temporary agreement to continue work under the present scale until a future retroactive agreement can be reached.

Wise County, the center of the Virginia coal field, has never experienced a general strike.

Some observers believed the strike actually would occur, but expressed the belief it would be short-lived and that a stimulated Congress would hasten legislation to care for the situation.

At the same time Virginia operators are looking toward Cincinnati where Appalachian Coals, Inc., is reorganizing in the hope that a Supreme Court approved sales agency may provide the ultimate solution of the problem.

Woman Offers Clew to Slaying At Hagerstown

Identifies Man Who Left Rooming House Night Before Murder.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., June 6.—Information given by a woman, who identified a man she said apparently was excited when he left the rooming house Saturday night of David L. Buchanan, 79, found murdered there Sunday morning, gave the police their first tangible clew after five days of unproductive investigation.

This man has been missing from his usual haunts here for two days and while police doubt that he is the actual murderer, they believe that he may hold the solution to one of the most baffling murders in years here.

Three to Be Held.

While virtually eliminating the angle that one of nine roomers at Buchanan's place might have committed the murder, police indicated tonight that at least three of those held would continue in custody. They are James Riggs, found sleeping in Buchanan's room while Buchanan's body lay in an adjoining room; John F. Burke, Philadelphia race follower, who left the rooming house Saturday night and went to Martinsburg, and Paul Mongan, found in possession of a saw identified as that taken from Buchanan's kitchen. The other six will probably be released tomorrow.

The police are convinced that robbery was one of the motives, since Buchanan was found with only 5 cents in his pockets. He was believed to have had in his possession $24 the night of the murder.

Cigarette Stubs.

But the position of Buchanan's body might indicate that his slayer did not intend to deal a fatal blow and believed when he left the room that the aged rooming house proprietor was not fatally wounded, because a pillow was placed beneath his head where it lay on the floor as if to make him comfortable until he recovered consciousness, while his body was covered with a sheet. The unopened knife of Buchanan's found in his hand was another thing that puzzled police, as well as numerous cigarette stubs found in the room with the body, indicating that whoever was with Buchanan remained in the room a long time. Buchanan did not smoke.

A coroner's jury, after hearing the testimony of Riggs and several roomers today, returned a verdict that Buchanan met death at the hands of an unknown person or persons.

Gets 60th Conviction In Short-Change Trick

An alleged attempt to short-change a waitress yesterday cost Henry Livingston, of Baltimore, 360 days of freedom.

He was sentenced to jail by Police Court Judge John P. McMahon after police produced records showing he had 59 convictions for similar offenses.

Livingston, police reported, attempted to puzzle a waitress in a downtown restaurant by arguing over change from a $10 bill. When he became angry, the waitress summoned police. Livingston was charged with attempted larceny by trick.

Graves of Confederates in Stonewall Cemetery Are Decorated.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., June 6.—For the second time in a week, Winchester citizens paid tribute to the men who participated in the Civil War when services were held today in honor of the Confederate dead in Stonewall Cemetery. Exactly a week ago, similar services were held for Union soldiers.

Of those who marched with troops of Lee and Jackson, but two remain in the vicinity of Winchester—George W. Dellinger, 90, and in excellent health, and Daniel Miller, 97, of Albin, who has been ill recently.

A parade in which former service men, firemen and members of patriotic organizations participated, was led by Dr. George H. Heist, marshal. The paraders marched to the cemetery, where J. Sloan Kuykendall, Winchester attorney, delivered the Memorial Day address. He was presented by Burr Powell Harrison, Commonwealth's attorney of Frederick County.

The Handley Citizens Band participated in the program. The Rev. W. F. Locke, Methodist presiding elder, pronounced the invocation and benediction. The program closed with a volley by Company I, 116th Infantry, firing squad and taps by W. H. McIlwee, director of the band.

More than 3,000 graves were decorated by members of Stonewall Memorial Association, Daughters of the Confederacy, and others.

MaxeyDenies Taking Cash As Protection

First Liquor Trial Defendant Testifies at Roanoke.

Knows 'Good and Well' There Was No Conspiracy, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., June 6.—First of 23 defendants to take the stand, Howard L. Maxey, Franklin County deputy sheriff, this afternoon at the trial of alleged liquor conspirators denied that he accepted alleged "protection" money and asserted that he knew "good and well there wasn't no such thing" as a conspiracy in the county.

The 52-year-old deputy excused himself from making raids on stills or raids of any other description unless there were "reports," on the ground that he was not an "investigator," that his job was not salaried and that he could make more "barbering" at his shop in Ferrum—closed since the trial began April 22—than he could from fees from capturing stills, seizing liquor and blockading roads.

Knew Cans Shipped.

He said he knew 5-gallon tin cans were shipped into Ferrum, and a lot were trucked out, he asserted, although he said he did not know whether on defendants' trucks, but "I had no way of capturing tin cans."

"If I got a report on anything I generally worked it," the deputy, appointed in 1929, said, adding that it was his job to "police" Ferrum and the Ferrum Training School, according to the late Sheriff K. P. Hodges who appointed him.

"Raiding was expensive on me—I had to barber," he told Special Prosecutor Sterling Hutcheson. "I couldn't give up the barber trade or I would have broke up. I don't believe any other man could afford to do raiding." He said that he owned only a 70-acre farm, unencumbered, a "broken-down car" and the barber shop.

If Ernest Daniels, an alleged co-conspirator, ever left $5 under a bottle in the shop, he said he knew nothing about it.

Door Handles Lead to Finding Of Hit-Run Car

Colored Man Arrested in Death of Two Near Lynchburg.

By the Associated Press.

Lynchburg, Va., June 6.—Broken door handles of an automobile today furnished the clew leading to identification and arrest of a colored man as the driver of a hit-and-run car which killed two pedestrians near here last night.

The man, Richard Jordan, 38, of Coolwell, found by officers in bushes back of his home, at first stammered out a denial, but later confessed he was the driver of the car which killed Leslie Samuel Gibson, 28, and James Edward Smith, 47, needle peddlers.

After being carried before his employers at Sweet Briar College and urged by them to tell the truth, the frightened man blurted:

"I will tell you all about it."

He said he came upon the two men from behind after he had turned a slight curve. He said the two were walking in the middle of the road and that he could not miss them.

"At first I thought a cow was in the road," he told State police and local detectives. "Then I saw it was two men. I cut my car to the side, but I could not get around them.

"I knew I had struck them and I slowed up, but other persons in the car said: 'You have not hit anything. Keep going.'"

The bodies of the two men were found on the Amherst highway near the entrance to Sweet Briar College last night. Nearby were found the door handles broken from the car.

Elks to Hold Flag Services At Monticello

Virginia Convention to Be Combined With National Rite.

Flagstaff to Be Erected at Home of Thomas Jefferson.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., June 6.—Representatives from 18 lodges in Virginia, as well as special delegations from Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia will come here next week-end to attend the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Virginia State Elks Association and the National Elks Flag Day ceremonial, to be held at Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson.

A feature of the flag day ceremony at the Jefferson shrine on Friday, June 14, will be the formal dedication of the flag staff, which has been erected there, at a cost of $1,500, as a gift from the order to the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation.

The ceremonial observance of lottesville Lodge, No. 389, nine years ago, has been held at Mon- Flag Day, inaugurated by Charticello by Virginia lodges since that date, by permission of the foundadation. It was noted that there was no suitable staff on the premises from which the national flag could be effectively displayed, and the grand lodge, by resolutions adopted at Milwaukee and Kansas City, provided for the presentation of such a staff on behalf of the order.

Staff Already in Place.

The flag staff has already been put in place on the little plateau in front of the servants' quarters at the shrine, on a site selected by the foundation's architect, Dr. Fiske Kimball, former member of the faculty at the University of Virginia, now director of the Museum of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. Dr. Kimball also designed the flag staff's base, which is of granite and copper.

A special ritual has been prepared for the dedication, as a part of the colorful ceremonies for the Flag Day service, which will be held at 3:30 p. m. on the east portico of the mansion. Michael F. Shannon, of Los Angeles, Calif., grand exalted ruler of the order, will deliver the principal address, and a number of grand lodge officers will be present to participate in the program, as well as official representatives of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation.

The first flag to fly from the staff will be the gift of the Virginia State Elks Association, and will be presented by William N. Perkinson, of Danville, president.

"Escape Me Never," at Keith's Proves Elisabeth Bergner Transcendent Artiste

Star Presents Memorable Bit Of Portraiture

Kennedy Play Is Improved by Transfer to Screen; Other Bills.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ESCAPE ME NEVER." British & Dominions picturization of the play by Margaret Kennedy, distributed by United Artists, adapted to the screen by the author and Carl Zuckmayer, starring Elisabeth Bergner, supported by Hugh Sinclair, Griffith Jones, Penelope Dudley Ward, Lyn Harding, Leon Quartermaine, and Irene Vanbrugh. Directed by Dr. Paul Czinner. Reviewed Wednesday night.

Margaret Kennedy's stage play, "Escape Me Never," not having been seen in Washington, it is, of course, impossible for Capital audiences to judge of the comparative merits of the Theater Guild production that achieved eminent success in New York and the celluloid edition revealed for the first time locally on the screen of the RKO-Keith Theater last night.

The consensus of Broadway critical opinion, however, is that the picture is in every important particular superior to the version presented last season in the living theater. This is not hard to believe. It is inconceivable that any stage could afford the slightly tawdry tale the fluent continuity, the variety and magnificence of scene and the irresistible sweep it is accorded by the cameras and microphones.

Both the play and the picture have been the beneficiaries of the surpassing genius of Elisabeth Bergner, who has previously been seen in Washington only in the title role of the film "Catherine the Great." The overwhelmingly favorable impression she created in that assignment not only is verified by her present performance but appreciably dwarfed by it.

Acclaimed a Modern Duse.

Her transitions from an impetuously self-reliant waif and unmarried mother in Venice to an earthly sprite, hopelessly in love with a musical cad, and from a stunned and broken-hearted mother to a wife able to forgive the unforgivable transgressions of her husband, are accomplished with a judicious emotional restraint that no other contemporary actress is able to command with a fraction of the forcefulness and dramatic intensity of this artiste, who has been acclaimed the modern Duse.

"Escape Me Never" affords its star a role of great breadth and vast potentialities, none of which fails of realization. Her most effective moments are those at the opening of the picture, when she is apprehended in the Venetian palace of the wealthy Sir Ivor McLean as an earthly and impudent little elf, who has donned the uniform of a visiting girl's school as a ruse to create a convenient opportunity to filch a little food; the poignant sequence in the hospital, when she learns her baby is dead; her pitiful interruption of the ballet rehearsal, being conducted by her husband, and the final, almost hysterically happy instant of her surrender to her overpowering love for a man of whom she knows the worst.

Here are scenes that encompass the full range of human emotions, played with incomparable surety, diversity and that utter realism that transcends "acting" and takes on the luster of inspired performance.

Romantic Counterplot.

Parallel with the pathetic story of little Gemma Jones is the romantic narrative of the infatuated daughter of the aristocratic McLeans, whose confusion of the strangely unlike Sanger brothers, Sebastian and Caryl, first is righted by Gemma, then disastrously disturbed by her and finally set right for good and all.

The scenes along the picturesque canals of Venice and amid the majestic grandeurs of the Dolomites are actual, having been made "on location" in Italy and the Alps.

Miss Bergner is supported by a splendidly balanced cast of English players, led by Hugh Sinclair, as the mad and frequently distasteful young composer; Griffith Jones, as his saner brother; Penelope Dudley Ward, an English society belle, serving her novitiate as a screen actress; Lyn Harding, Leon Quartermaine and Irene Vanbrugh, in the role of the imperious Lady McLean. The picture has been smoothly and illuminatingly directed by Dr. Paul Czinner, in private life Miss Bergner's husband.

The Pathe News, which on Friday will be devoted almost exclusively to the first birthday celebration of the Dionne quintuplets, and an Oswald natural-color cartoon comedy, "Springtime Serenade," a bit about the groundhog, are the only supplementaries of a feature that is enthusiastically recommended as a film that offers the rare combination of superb artiste and admirable production.

Pierce Hall

"WHERE MASKS ARE WORN." The Columbia Players present the comedy-drama in three acts and four scenes by Dorothea J. Lewis, directed by the author, assisted by Elizabeth Dyer and Juliet Edes Alves, with settings by Jane Lasater Rubey. Special music by Adolf Torovsky. At Pierce Hall June 5 and 6. Reviewed Wednesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

THE CAST.

Janis.....Dorothy Clarke
Nell Harrison.....Bess Wilkinson
Primrose O'Brien.....Helen Mead
Michael Mallon.....Robert M. Miller
Maximilian.....Joe Bourne

The Columbia Players brought their 1934-35 season to an end last evening, presenting at Pierce Hall Dorothea J. Lewis' new comedy-drama, "Where Masks Are Worn," a play of stage folk and their efforts to reconcile, in the eyes of those who idolize them, their on-stage personalities with their off-stage selves.

The new play is wisely subtitled an "artificial comedy" for the action is nearly non-existent, the movement starting slowly and never seeming to get fully under way. The comedy angle has been more amply treated, for line after line carries hearty laughs.

The players themselves do not seem to warm up to the possibilities of their roles. Robert M. Miller, as the idolized "tragic tragedian," who is called upon to display his real and more ebullient side, hesitatingly reads his lines, attaining neither the proper degree of levity nor seriousness. In the in-between moments, however, Mr. Miller is best, especially when he is romping around his dressing room with Primrose O'Brien, the star of the show next door.

Feminine Lead Split.

The opposite lead is split between Helen Mead, as the actress, and Dorothy Clark, as the star-worshiping girl. Both are commendable, the former as a woman wise in the ways of the world, the latter for just the opposite reasons.

Joe Bourne has a choice bit as the property man. Adolf Torovsky, who wrote the music for the comedy ditty, "The White Angora Rabbit," also appeared as pianist for the act-three stage-party. Others appearing were Juliet Edes Alves, Bunnie Skinner, Margery Rice, Ann Storie, Lois Alexander, Dorothy White, B. A. P. Doehrer, Wayne Bobst, Bess Wilkerson, G. DeWitt Miller, Everette Weaver, Eileen Fowler, Richard Kreutzburg and Wade Robinson.

Two excellent sets were constructed by Jane Lasater Rubey.

"THE UNFINISHED SYMPHONY." Gaumont-British picturization of an original screen story by Walter Reisch, with dialogue by Benn W. Levy, featuring Helen Chandler, Marta Eggerth, and Hans Jaray, with Ronald Squire, Beryl Laverick, and Elliott Makeham. Music by Franz Schubert, with screen arrangements by Willy Schmidt-Gentner. Directed by Willy Forst. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon (third week) by W. A. Whitney.

The world knows not how or why Franz Schubert's Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished") in B Minor was never completed, but it does know that in the two movements extant there is some of the greatest symphonic music ever penned. Thus, it becomes insignificant whether "The Unfinished Symphony" recounts a true story or not, since that immortal work, together with the same composer's "Ave Maria," "Serenade," "Moment Musicale," and various lieder, furnish the auricular background for a superb operetta.

Nevertheless, here is an excellent story, whose values are augmented by the delineations of a splendid cast, music of exquisite charm, and ensemble effects—vocal and instrumental—by Vienna's famed Philharmonic Orchestra, State Opera and Saengerknaben. Even with a vastly less satisfying story, the musical embellishments of this picture would alone be worth whatever it might cost to see it.

As "The Unfinished Symphony" (also known as "Lover Divine," in case you have wondered) goes into its third week (a record in itself), lovers of fine music in all its manifestations are urged to place this work on their "must" list.

Diverting short subjects complement a program unreservedly recommended.

Two Stars of Next Week's Screen

Above at left is a serious young actor by the name of Hugh Sinclair, who will be seen on the screen of RKO-Keith's Theater during the ensuing week—the film opened on Fifteenth street last night—as leading man with Elisabeth Bergner in the camera version of her stage success, "Escape Me Never," reviewed elsewhere on this page. The smiling young man, leaning there at his ease, at the right, is Donald Woods, former leading man with the National Theater Players, who comes to the screen at the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow in "The Florentine Dagger," under the aegis of the Freres Warner.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, June 6 (AP).—(United States Department of Agriculture)—Only scattered sales of very moderate volume were being closed in the Boston wool market. The greater part of this business was on 64s and finer territory wools and on medium-grade fleece wools. Quotations were largely nominal on most grades and about steady. Limited quantities occasionally became available at prices on the low side or slightly below ranges quoted last week. Sizable lots were quite firmly held at unchanged asking prices.

Theaters Offer Generous Bills To Lure Nobles

Shrine Week Programs Announced; Al Fresco Fun Also on Tap.

The demand for seats to see Ethel Barrymore as guest star in the National Theater Players' revival of Zoe Akins' play, "Declassee," has been so great, since the announcement that the Players will end their current "little season" on Saturday night, that an extra matinee will be given tomorrow afternoon at 2:20. In this revival of one of her greatest successes, Miss Barrymore is arousing even greater enthusiasm than was the case in her first appearance with the players in Maugham's "The Constant Wife." She is supported by the full roster of the stock company, augmented by a considerable group of Broadway players and the cream of the Capital's resident artists.

• • • •

In keeping with the importance of the National Shrine Convention, Loew's Fox Theater has assembled a bill for the week beginning tomorrow which has as its principal screen feature the third of the films to reach the Capital in glorification of the Department of Justice agents' war against crime, "Public Hero No. 1." The foremost roles are played by Chester Morris, Lionel Barrymore and Joseph Calleia, supported by Jean Arthur, Paul Kelly and Lewis S. Stone. The stage bill will be headlined by Al Siegel and Carolyn Marsh, pianist-composer and songstress; Charley Foy and Company, Sammy White, dancing star, and his own company, and the Don Lee and Louise revue. Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's overture will be added.

• • • •

Continuing its "June Jubilee" bills, the Earle Theater next week, beginning tomorrow, will present Bette Davis as screen star in "The Girl From Tenth Avenue," in which she is supported by Ian Hunter and Colin Clive, two British actors; Alison Skipworth, Phillip Reed, Katherine Alexander and John Eldredge. Eddy Duchin and his orchestra, from the Central Park Casino, New York, will headline the stage portion of the entertainment. Other acts will be contributed by Arthur Doran, radio mimic, who won the 1935 personality award, and Nedra and Powell, who offer "Mystic Mosaics." The bill will be augmented by short sound subjects, Universal Newsreel, with Graham McNamee, and orchestral overture, conducted by Freddy Clark.

• • • •

Will Rogers is said to have one of the most congenial assignments of his career before the cameras in "Doubting Thomas," which opens the new week at Loew's Palace Theater tomorrow. In this film adaptation of George Kelly's stage comedy of "The Torch Bearers," the star is supported by Bille Burke, Alison Skipworth, Frances Grant, Sterling Halloway, Frank Albertson and Gail Patrick. The bill also will include the fourth issue of "The March of Time," the Metrotone News and abbreviated sound subjects.

• • • •

"The Florentine Dagger" is the ominous title borne by the new murder-mystery that comes to the screen at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The principal roles are played by Donald Woods, Margaret Lindsay, C. Aubrey Smith, Robert Barrat, Frank Reicher, Charles Judels, Rafaelo Ottiano, Paul Porcasi and Henry Kolker. The picture, based on a story by Ben Hecht, has an interesting background in Italy and Vienna. Dave Apollon in a musical reel, "Wishing Stone," a "Fantasy in Fashion" and full 15-minute newsreel supplement the feature.

• • • •

Spencer Tracy and Wendy Barrie have the pivotal roles in the Fox screen version of Albert Traynor's story of "It's a Small World," occupying the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater, beginning tomorrow and remaining one week. Raymond Walburn, Virginia Sale, Astrid Allwyn and Nick Foran are foremost among the supporting players. News events, a comedy and added short-reel subjects will complete the bill.

• • • •

"The Unfinished Symphony," with Helen Chandler, Hans Jaray and Marta Eggerth in the outstanding roles, will continue a third week at the Belasco Theater. This romance of the life of Franz Schubert, the great composer, is one of the best of the cinema's operettas.

• • • •

For the closing bill of his exceptionally successful 42-week season of burlesque, Col. James J. Lake has assembled the best talent of the year to appear Shrine week at the Gayety Theater, beginning with the customary Sunday matinee. The stars of the "Powder Puff Revue" Company are Mike Sachs and Fred "Falls" Binder, comedians; the platinum Carroll Sisters, two of burlesque's ace charmers; Alice Kennedy, Conny Ryan, Earl Root, Billie Lamont, Cynthia Michel and a prize line of "Dancing Byrantettes." The extra added attraction will be supplied by the unrivaled Hinda Wausau.

The sudden burst of real summer weather that overtook the Capital a few days ago has served to center the attention of amusement seekers on Glen Echo Park, with special emphasis on the Crystal Pool, one of the most completely appointed natatoria in the country. All of the 50-odd amusement devices are running at midseason speed and dancing is enjoyed nightly, except Sunday, in the Spanish garden ballroom, to the music of McWilliams' 12-piece orchestra. Free picnic facilities are provided for family, club and organization groups.

Krueger Tops Mackenzie by Stroke to Lead Open Field;

Coppola Yields Red Sox Only Five Hits as Nats Win, 3 to 0

Pitcher, 20, Impressive In Debut

Keeps Foe Hitless Until Fifth; Is in Only One Hole, Emerges.

Myer Sparkles in Field; Walberg Surrenders 2 Runs in Third.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A STOCKY Italian kid of 20 years tutored in the wiles of big-league pitching last winter, when Owner Clark Griffith braved the snow at Griffith Stadium to supervise his daily workouts, yesterday rewarded the Nats.

Henry Coppola started his first major league ball game and won it. He won it to the acclaim of a scant 3,000 fans who saw the young Italian pitch the Nats to victory with each rise and dip of his powerful right arm—won it by holding the Boston Red Sox to five hits—all singles, and shutting them out by a score of 3 to 0.

As Coppola strode from the mound at the end of the ball game, Manager Bucky Harris rushed halfway to the pitcher's box to wring the hand of the youth who blossomed as a pitching star in Harris' hour of need. For it was in sheer desperation for pitching talent that Harris' glance fell upon the Italian lad as he searched for a likely pitcher before the game.

But Coppola's is a story of youthful hope and perseverance. Plucked from the Albany team by the Nats last fall after only a few brief months of experience in the minor leagues, he immediately made his home in Washington. In the height of the football season, he strode into Griffith Stadium and asked for a uniform. He wanted to practice pitching.

The lad's ambition impressed Clark Griffith. Himself a star of the big league mounds, the silver-haired owner of the Nats imparted his own technique to Coppola. In cold and snow, the pair labored, owner and pupil. Coppola bore Griffith's own stamp of approval when the players gathered in the South.

But until yesterday, Manager Harris had found no place for Coppola to start a game. His success in relief roles had been indifferent. Yesterday, Harris decided on the risk.

Not a hit did the Red Sox get off Coppola until the fifth inning. The Nats had taken a 2-0 lead against Rube Walberg and Coppola protected that margin like one ordained. The fast ball that he pitched in there, he varied with a side-arm delivery to the right-handed hitters, and in the lone inning that the Red Sox bunched two of their hits, Coppola emerged from his predicament like a veteran.

Sparkling Play by Mates.

Back of Coppola, his mates played as if inspired to preserve for the rookie his shut-out aims. Once Ossie Bluege started a lightning double play on Ferrell's smashing grounder, but it was Buddy Myer who won the fielding laurels with a story-book play in the fourth inning.

Bill Werber was on second base with one out when Joe Cronin smashed a terrific grounder over second base. Like a cat, Buddy Myer pounced upon the ball, far behind the bag, as his skidding spikes drew a multiple gash in the smooth dirt near the grass. His stop was miraculous, but the throw to first base that followed was superb. Far off balance, Myer put the last ounce of his strength into the ball to get it to Joe Kuhel a half step ahead of the flying Cronin.

The Nats themselves were not over-active with the bat against three Red Sox pitchers, but they bunched three of their six hits in the third inning to score twice against Walberg. Coppola, himself, led off the uprising with a single to left, his first hit in the big leagues, and with two out Heinie Manush banged a double against the right-field wall and Myer singled to left to bring the Nats a 2-0 lead.

Myer Scores on Error.

It was 3-0 in the sixth when Myer, who had been issued a walk by Gordan Rhodes, went to second on Travis' grounder and scored when Rhodes finally decided Powell's slashing drive into the box, only to throw it wildly past Dahlgren at first.

But everything after the Nats' first run was superfluous. The Sox were baffled by Coppola's speed and control. Rarely did he throw one across the plate, but he was cutting the corners beautifully. It was in the seventh that he faced his greatest test. With one out, Pinch Hitter Bing Miller and Almada singled, Miller advancing to third.

In this crisis, Coppola disposed of Bill Werber on a feeble pop to Travis, and Johnny Stone gathered in Johnson's line drive to right field to retire the side. Going into the ninth, Coppola faced his final test. He struck out Joe Cronin, but Reynolds singled to left. Melillo was thrown out by Travis, but for a fleet moment Coppola's shut-out dreams vanished. Dahlgren slammed a burning drive toward left field, but Cecil Travis threw his glove in its path to present the young Italian kid with his scoreless victory.

Tigers Humble Tribe, 10-9; Tie for 3d

Goslin Is Hero, Drives In Winning Tally in 10th; Rowe Is Routed.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, June 6.—Schoolboy Rowe blew up in an amazing manner after pitching six hitless innings today, but despite their skyrocket ride the Tigers managed to defeat Cleveland, 10 to 9, in ten innings and move into a tie with the Indians for third place in the American League standing.

The losers slipped behind the idle Chicago White Sox and only a heavy rainstorm prevented the possibility of further changes in the standing. The teams were scheduled for a double-header to settle yesterday's tied second game, but rain, which had threatened all through the opener, began to fall heavily after the finish and the afterpiece was postponed.

Run Up 7 to 0 Lead.

While Rowe was making his fine start, the Tigers slugged Walter Stewart and Ralph Winegarner freely to run up a 7-0 lead with the aid of Gerald Walker's third-inning homer.

Joe Sullivan came in to hold the Indians in check in the last two innings, while the Tigers came through to win in the tenth on Charley Gehringer's double and Goslin's single.

Judge Landis May Decide On Pitts

Bramham, Who Barred Sing Sing Start, Says He 'Hopes So.'

Meanwhile, Ex-Convict Leaves for Albany as Celebrity.

By the United Press.

OSSINING, N. Y., June 6.—President W. G. Bramham, of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, today said he hoped his ban on "Alabama" Pitts "may reach the highest review."

He telegraphed Warden Lewis E. Lawes the issue was whether a former convict should be allowed to play in organized baseball.

"But if my judgment is erroneous," he explained, "I am glad the executive committee and Commissioner Landis have the power to reverse me."

By the United Press.

Albany, N. Y., June 6.—Edwin "Alabama" Pitts tonight started on a climb from prison walls to glory on the baseball diamond.

He was confident of success.

This morning he was just a number in Sing Sing. Tonight he is a member of the Albany Senators, of the International League.

An order of W. G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Professional Leagues—the minor leagues' baseball organization—wasn't worrying Pitts.

Making an Appeal.

"I'll get to play baseball," he said aboard a train as it rolled along the Hudson from Ossining to Albany. "My friends are making an appeal for me."

Pitts didn't blame Bramham for opposing his entrance into baseball because he is a former convict. "Everyone is entitled to his own opinion," he said.

John Evers, veteran diamond star and business manager of the Albany club, has his opinion, too. He announced on Pitts' arrival here that he was dispatching the youth to join the Senators in Syracuse for their game there tonight.

"He's going to be with the team tonight," Evers said, "whether it's collecting tickets or sitting on the bench or even announcing on the public address system. If possible, he'll play with us by Sunday."

Pitts held no malice toward the judge who sent him "up the river" for 8 to 16 years—a sentence his good conduct cut to five.

Thought Judge Fair.

"I thought he was fair," said "Alabama," speaking in a soft Southern drawl. "He could have given me 20 years. I'd only been in New York two months out of the

Sarazen-Didrikson Sign for Golf Tour

Gene Thinks Well of Woman Athlete's Game.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 6.—Before starting his first round in the national golf tournament today, Gene Sarazen announced he has signed a contract to make an exhibition tour with Mildred Babe Didrikson, the Texas all-around athlete, starting in July.

Definite arrangements depend on whether or not Sarazen goes abroad for the British open, scheduled the latter part of June. Gene said he is doubtful of making the trip.

"Miss Didrikson shows great aptitude for the game and may prove the best woman golfer ever developed in this country," said Sarazen.

Dead Heat Seen By Detroit Crowd

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 6.—A dead heat in the third race at the Detroit track furnished the thrill for a crowd of some 5,000 spectators who saw Brilliant Pal and Levi Cooke pound across the finish line so close together on a slow track that it was impossible to separate them.

Imperial Bob took an early lead in the 6-furlong affair for 3-year-olds, but was soon displaced by Brilliant Pal, a long shot. Levi Cooke caught Brilliant Pal at the eighth pole. Over the last 50 yards the two raced as a team and their heads bobbed over the wire at exactly the same moment, being clocked at 1:16 2-5. Odessa Clark finished third.

Another close finish developed in the fourth race, won by Lamp Black, put across by Charley Stevenson, leading jockey of the meeting, in a nose victory over Grace Bunting, with Burnside third, two lengths back. It was a 6-furlong affair for 4-year-olds and upward.

Helen Moody Is Pressed to Triumph

Wins Over Mary Hardwick After Near-Defeat, 4-6, 7-5, 6-3.

By the Associated Press.

WEYBRIDGE, England, June 6. Helen Wills Moody was forced to use all her tennis guile and summon every stroke in her bag before she could subdue 21-year-old Mary Hardwick, apple-cheeked English girl, in the quarter-final round of the St. George's Hill tournament today.

Harassed equally by a court made slippery by a drizzling rain and by her opponent's accurate, tenacious game, Mrs. Moody dropped the first set in quick order and was within two points of defeat in the second before she began pulling the match out of the fire.

Miss Hardwick, needing only two winning shots to gain sudden fame, finally overrode the baseline after a long rally and then double-faulted to lose the golden opportunity. For Mrs. Moody, gradually getting her own magnificent game under control, never gave her another chance and won, 4—6, 7—5, 6—3.

Gains Command.

Where it had been Miss Hardwick who had called the tune almost entirely in the first two sets, continually pulling her older opponent out of position for brilliant passing shots, it was the Californian, playing in her first tournament in nearly two years, who held complete command at the finish.

In the last three games after the third set had reached 3-all, Mrs. Moody had Mary shuttling back and forth on the baseline until her tongue hung out.

The match removed any lingering doubt as to Mrs. Moody's ability to move about smartly when she has to. She appeared comparatively fresh at the finish of a match which would have exhausted many players.

The former world champion's game still is rusty in spots, her once immaculate forehand lacks both power and accuracy at times, but the consensus was that she will manage to get through the present tournament. She will play "Billy" Yorke tomorrow and, if she wins, will meet either Eileen Bennett Whittingstall or Elsie Goldsack Pittman in the final Saturday.

District Star Shoots Par In Test

Congressional Pro Is 2d Despite Bunker, Trap Trouble.

Spencer's 73 Puts Him Close; Houghton Also in Running.

By a Staff Correspondent.

OAKMONT COUNTRY CLUB, Oakmont, Pa., June 6.—Two grim-faced, gallant sons from the Nation's Capital, Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, and Cliff Spencer, of Beaver Dam, today roared their challenge at 157 of the world's greatest golfers with a spectacular display of shotmaking that skyrocketed them into the spotlight in the National Open championship over Oakmont's treacherous and famous course.

Mackenzie's par-equaling 72, a scoring masterpiece in every sense of the word, found him in the No. 2 position, with the raven-haired Spencer one shot behind, with a beautiful 73.

A third Washingtonian, Al Houghton, of Kenwood, remained in the running by virtue of his 78, while Leo Walper, also of the District, professor at a Bethesda driving range, blew himself out of the championship picture with an awful 85, 13 strokes over orthodox figures.

Thus, for the first time in history did Washington offer two men who commanded the respect of the golfing siege guns at the end of 18 holes of the toughest grind in the ancient Scottish game.

Gets Birdies to Start.

Off to a flying start when he birdied the first and second, Mackenzie reached the turn in 38, one over, and played the back nine for a superb 34. Spencer levelled par with his 37, and went one over with a 36 on the incoming nine—because he missed a 6-footer on the home hole by inches. And Houghton after a dismal 41 that included six 5s, came back with a grand 37. Walper's best was 40—45.

With no gallery at all, Mackenzie drove a screamer down the fairway, was just off the front edge of the first green in 2, and putted up to within 2 feet for a birdie 3—certainly an encouraging start. A drive, a niblick and a 10-foot putt gave him a birdie 3 on the second, and on the third, he was just off the edge in 2, and putted up stone-dead for a par 4.

Mackenzie's drive on the 536-yard fourth caught a bunker. He played a great iron to get on in 3 and stroked his putts safely for a par 5.

Hole high with his second on the fifth hole, Mackenzie was down in 2 from 10 feet for his par. On the short sixth, his tee shot was parked to the right of the bunker. He went over with his second, but chipped back beautifully, 8 feet from the pin, and got a 4, 1 over par.

Bunkers Don't Bother.

Bunkered again was his drive on the seventh, but the Congressional pro reached the green in 3 and was in for his 5, 1 over par. He played a brassie to within 30 feet of the pin and was down in regulation figures for his 3. Roland's drive was in the rough on the ninth. His third was a foot short of the green, a few

Pittsburgh, June 6 (AP).—Guy Bush limited the Cardinals to four hits in a mound duel with Jess Haines today and the Pirates won, 2 to 1, to move into second place in the National League standing. Earl Grace's second-inning double brought in both Pirate runs.

Beloit Player Cards 71 For Low

Obscure Golfer Is Lone Entrant to Break Par on Course.

Finishes Late in Day Ahead of 157 in National Open.

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

OAKMONT, Pa., June 6.—Exactly ten years after he won the medal in the National Amateur over this course, Roland Mackenzie, 28-year-old [illegible]ington professional, came back to match par with a brilliant 72 in the first round of the National open golf championship, but late this evening he was nosed out for the lead by a hed-haired Beloit (Wis.) professional with three years of competition in golf to his credit.

MacKenzie, the tall, blond Congressional pro, who abandoned the amateur ranks in the fall of 1932, yielded the first-day honors to Alvin (Butch) Krueger, who made such favorites as Olin Dutra, defending champion; Gene Sarazen, the 6-to-1 choice; Craig Wood, the New Jersey bomber; Paul Runyan, the national P. G. A. titleholder, and Tommy Armour, the dour Scot and winner of the open here in 1927, look like a bunch of second raters with his spectacular 71.

Krueger, comparatively unknown as far as national golf competition is concerned, fired his shots with such unerring accuracy that he was the only man in an international field of 157 stars who was good enough to break par.

Tipping the scales at 160 pounds, of slight build, his fiery locks drop-

Babe Didrikson and Dizzy Dean Are Among Onlookers at Open

By Paul Gallico.
A Special Correspondent.

OAKMONT COUNTRY CLUB, Pittsburgh, Pa., June 6.—On this, the first day of the annual three-day outing and clambake of the Amateur and Professional Golfers, I found more excitement and interest in some of the famous spectators in the gallery than in the players. The boys were out there, dumping them into the traps, whacking them out of bounds, and sadly wagging their heads in the time-honored gestures as they missed 2-foot putts, but on the lawn near the ninth hole was Mildred Ella Didrikson, the Texas Babe, and in the gallery, following Tom Armour and Sid Brews, was a pale, thin, worried-looking young man by the name of Jerome Herman Dean, better known as Dizzy.

I hardly knew Babe Didrikson when I first saw her today. Her hair was frizzed and had a neat little wave in it, was parted and prettily combed. There was a touch of rouge on her cheeks and red on her lips. The tomboy had suddenly grown up.

This was not the Babe Didrikson that I used to know—tough, careless of looks and attire, because to dress up and use make-up and perfume was sissy. Today she wore a charming ensemble (forgive me, my dears, but the dressmaker in me comes out when I write about women's clothes), a light tan dress, dark brown collared blouse, tied at the neck with yellow cord, tan coat with a brown plaid over design, and high-heeled white linen shoes. Her white bag had the initials "M. B. D." in metal, and the inside of the bag was that of every woman.

"Ah got tired of being a tomboy," said Mildred, "so Ah quit. Ah'm a business woman golfer now, so Ah guess Ah hyev to look the part."

She is tied up with a golf manufacturing concern making women's clubs with her name stamped into

Gloritone Comes From Behind to Take Charles Town Event

Shanks Takes Winner Wide Of Field

Rain Slows W. Va. Track; Double High Again, Pays $197.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

RACE TRACK, Charles Town, W. Va., June 6.—Gloritone, the old campaigner, owned by Martin Finn, of Washington, D. C., circled her field here this afternoon to win the fifth race, occupying the feature position on the program. It was an all-Washington victory, for Jockey Johnny Shanks contributed the saddle work in masterful fashion.

Two lengths behind the daughter of the Porter came Dutiful to take second from Wise Money by a margin of a length. Gloritone's triumph was not unanticipated and she paid only $4.40 while in the favorite role.

Gloritone proved one of the few horses at this track to come from last to first and she turned the trick over the Charles Town course, a trifle longer than 6 furlongs. Shanks elected to swing into the rail and save ground as Miss Toucan and Wise Money battled for the pace setting honors.

Finishes With Rush.

Along the back stretch, Shanks began his move and Gloritone gained momentum rounding the turn to finish with a rush that left no measure of doubt as to the superior horse under the conditions.

A crowd of 3,500 watched the program which was run over a track heavy from last night's downpour. Times for the events were of slow freight proportions, but the racing was interesting.

Another all-Washington combination won the third race. Jockey Eddie Smith, riding his father's horse, Repeal, came from far back to score. Young Smith came back to take the fourth race with Aufoin, trained by H. S. Takera, the Japanese horseman.

The daily double at this track continues to pay off in telephone numbers. In fact, it has averaged a few cents better than $181 for the eight days that the track has been in operation. The high point, of course, was the $648.80 pay-off of last week. Four times the double has gone over the century mark.

Play Is $2,410.

Despite the fact that an odds-on favorite was involved today, the "double" provided a $197 reward for the lucky ones. The betting on the twin wager has increased steadily. Today's play of $2,410 was the best for a week-day to date.

Today's "double" had mountainous possibilities after Little Fitz scored his surprise victory in the first race at a $65.80 mutuel. The $197 combination on Repeal, in the third race, was the smallest of the possible pay-offs.

HAROLD'S WAY went to the front at once, opened up a good lead and drew out fast through the stretch. ONUS, well placed all the way, continued courageously to the end. SPEAR moved up stoutly midway of the turn, but was unable to reach the two leaders under punishment. SEPTEMBER CHILD, forwardly placed all the way, was unable to improve her position when called upon. UNCLE JULY closed some ground. IRISH HERO faltered after showing early speed.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LITTLE MIRACLE, $5.00, $2.80, $2.60; KRONA, $3.30, $3.10; OVER YONDER, $5.60.

LITTLE MIRACLE, hustled to the front in the opening strides, drew close under hustling tactics and was in hand at the end. KRONA moved up stoutly on the outside, continued gamely to the close, but was unable to threaten the winner. OVER YONDER moved up steadily, saved ground in the stretch, and closed with good energy. MILD MANNERS, away fast, dropped back badly. FREE SPIRIT was unable to reach the leaders. CABLEGRAM was never a factor.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800 claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:21. Off at 3:21½. Winner, P. E. Kraft's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—JUDGE SCHILLING, $5.00, $3.30, $2.50; PLAYFUL MARTHA, $4.40, $3.00; VEE EIGHT, $2.70.

JUDGE SCHILLING took command at once, shook off MEROVECH and held sway to the end. PLAYFUL MARTHA moved up gradually, lost ground at the stretch turn, but closed gamely. VEE EIGHT, slow to begin, moved up on the inside in the last five-sixteenths and closed with good energy. MEROVECH forced the pace of the winner for the first half-mile, tiring thereafter. PAR VALUE tired. DARK DEVIL had brief early speed.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Londonderry. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:54. Off at 3:56. Winner, Col. W. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOSTON BROOK, $7.70, $3.80, $3.00; UP AND UP, $4.70, $3.90; GALON BOY, $4.90.

BOSTON BROOK, quickest to begin, but lacking speed to maintain his position, dropped back, then came on the inside rounding the turn, assumed the command before reaching the stretch, and held his field safe to the end. UP AND UP, away slowly, worked his way up gradually at a loss of ground and closed in determined fashion in the last five-sixteenths. GALON BOY, in the forefront throughout, continued gamely to the close. HEADIN' HOME, hustled through on the inside in the first furlong to take command, weakened in the closing quarter-mile, and was never able to make up the lost ground. CANDIMATE was never prominent. BARCAROLLE was never able to gain a prominent position.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:26. Off at 4:26. Winner, P. Doyle's br. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ACAUTAW, $4.60, $3.10, $2.80; HEEDLESS GAL, $3.20, $2.90; MY BOSS, $8.60.

ACAUTAW, at home in the going, outrun his field to the first turn, drew into a good lead and, steadied along under slight restraint, won with speed in reserve. HEEDLESS GAL, in closest pursuit of the leader throughout, held on gamely to the end. MY BOSS moved up steadily in the back stretch and closed with good energy. BIG SHOW closed some ground in the last five-sixteenths. POPO was on the outside all the way and was never a factor. STRAIT JACKET weakened badly in the last half-mile.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:00. Off at 5:04½. Winner, J. U. Gratton's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PASS, $11.30, $5.60, $4.00; MANTADOS, $8.50, $5.70; RAMUS, $4.80.

PASS was kept within striking distance of the pace, moved up on the outside of the leaders through the stretch and, responding gamely to hard urging, was along in the concluding strides. MANTADOS displayed speed from the start, was rated along under slight restraint, withstood repeated bids from RAMUS, but was unable to stave off the closing bid of the winner. RAMUS had speed from the start, showed in front briefly, but was unable to keep pace though fighting courageously to the end. MOMO, unruly at the post, came with a belated rush in the last quarter-mile. MYNAH was never a serious contender. OGLE was never prominent.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:32. Off at 5:32½. Winner, P. M. Pike's ch. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MILD, $4.40, $3.30, $2.50; PROSECUTOR, $5.30, $3.10; PLUMAGE, $2.80.

MILD, as usual slow to begin, moved up gamely on the inside leaving the back stretch, obtained clear sailing on the inside through the stretch and was up in the closing strides. PROSECUTOR forced the pace of TODY WEST, went to the front when called upon, but lost ground at the stretch turn and, bidding on tenaciously, just failed to last. PLUMAGE improved her position gradually on the outside and finished with good energy. YANCEY, well up for the first half-mile, weakened thereafter.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 6:02. Off at 6:07. Winner, L. C. WASWANAPPI followed in closest pursuit of the early pace, wore down CAP PISTOL for the command and, opening up a good lead, dominated the running for the remainder of the way, winning with speed in reserve. CAPPOQUIN worked his way up gradually and closed with good energy in the closing drive. BEFITTING, under restraint early, moved up menacingly leaving the back stretch, but was unable to reach the leaders. TAR BUCKET, well placed and restrained early, was unable to reach the others when called upon. CAP PISTOL had speed for the first half-mile, tiring thereafter. SAXOVA had early speed. JOE JAY unseated his rider at the start and was unable to enter into serious contention.

Klick 'Shoots the Works,' Pounding Spar Mate Relentlessly

Speed Shown In Bristling Workout

Many Notables to See Monday Fight With Canzoneri.

By Bill McCormick.

FRANKIE KLICK shot the works in a gymnasium workout yesterday.

Always a mediocre gymnasium fighter, all week Klick had been content just to loaf through the business of swapping swats with sparmates preparing him for his 12-round contest against Tony Canzoneri at Griffith Stadium Monday night.

"He looks terrible," was the general consensus of the ringwise who kept a weather eye cocked on his sparring sessions.

"Wait till Thursday," Klick and his manager, Ray Carlen, kept telling the skeptical. "Frankie doesn't like to murder sparring partners, but we'll turn him loose the last few days. Thursday will be the first day."

Amazes With Speed.

If Friday and Saturday workouts are anything like yesterday's, they will be the last days for Klick's animated punching bags. The challenger for the lightweight title now worn by Canzoneri worked only on Bill McMahon, his chief sparmate, but he worked on him so efficiently for three rounds that the exchange of wallops did him practically no good at all.

Usually a flat-footed fighter in the training ring, Klick amazed the ringwise by the startling speed with which he zipped over the canvas yesterday. He was here, there and everywhere for three rounds, and McMahon tasted more leather than there is in a tannery.

Uses Clever Feints.

Klick kept a straight left poked out and continually lured McMahon in with a series of clever feints. Once McMahon came within range, Klick counter-punched his ears off, usually winding up his rallies by sending both hands to the body with machine-gun precision.

Frankie belied reports that he is no puncher by sending McMahon back on his heels time after time with a right to the heart, his best punch. He bobbed Billy's head around with long rights almost at will and otherwise annoyed his hapless sparmate.

Perhaps the greatest array of notables ever to grace a ringside will be present when Klick flings the first business punch tossed in the direction of Canzoneri since the Babe Ruth of the prize ring regained his lightweight crown.

Any good fight in Washington always draws many solons and national figures who go practically unnoticed here, but would cause a New York crowd to gape. Any outstanding fight in New York draws stage, screen and radio stars who attract a modicum of attention in Gotham but would create quite a stir in Washington.

For the Canzoneri-Klick bout both crowds will be combined and everyone can gape at will.

Gen. William Phelan, chairman of the New York boxing commission, will head the list of ring notables descending on the Capital for the contest. Klick is the No. 1 contender for Canzoneri's title and the general will be on hand to watch him perform against Tony to see if he justifies the rating.

Johnston to Attend.

Jimmy Johnston, impresario of Madison Square Garden; perhaps Erney Ross and Jimmy McLarnin, representatives from the Twentieth Century Club in New York, and practically every well-known boxing writer in the country are other representatives of the punch profession who will be on hand when the gong rings.

From stage, radio and screen will come Will Rogers, Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler, George M. Cohan, Burns and Allen, Charley and Eddie Foy, Ethel Barrymore and many others.

James Farley will be there in person, as well Senator Pat Harrison, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Huey P. Long and many others from political circles.

The Shrine, of course, will be well represented. Danna S. Williams, imperial potentate; Hugh Caldwell, of Seattle; Everett Mattoon, of Los Angeles; Bill Woodfield, of San Francisco, and Andrew A. D. Rahn are among the prominent nobles who will watch the battle.

Klick will move his training quarters from the Portland Gymnasium to the gymnasium of Our Lady of Victory Church, on Conduit and River roads. Frankie will take his first workout at the new headquarters this afternoon starting at 2 o'clock.

Canzoneri continues to train at his Marlboro, N. Y., camp and is not expected to arrive here before Sunday. Jack Dempsey, who will referee the important contest, will reach Washington Monday morning.

All reservations must be taken up by 8 o'clock tonight or back in the ticket racks go those choice seats being held. This action was made necessary by the heavy demand for seats. The throwing of reservations back on the market will release a new supply of the best in the ball park for those customers who are smart enough to grab them up at once.

Let's Go Fishing . . .

By M. W. Meier.

WALTONIAN Bob Pyle and his friend, ex-Congressman J. G. Strong, have grandsons of whom each is extraordinarily fond. One is Mills Kinney, aged 8, and the other is James G. Strong the 3rd, who has seen 9 years go by. Every now and then the doting grandfathers take the lads on a fishing trip in the fond belief they can teach the youngsters a love of the outdoors and the gentle art of fishing.

They tried it over the week-end with a party of adult friends and they are still puzzled as to who did the teaching. It seems that the adults pooled a two-bit piece each for the benefit of the angler catching the best string. Master Kinney copped the cash both days, returning home with not only a handsome string of fish but scads of pocket money as well. His grandfather was crestfallen.

Capt. McCray skippered the party from Point No Point and the total bag was 96 croakers and six weaks. Only 15 of the croakers ran to decent size, with the trout averaging over the three-pound mark.

Mr. Pyle considers Point No Point one of the best all-round fishing spots available to local anglers and from the standpoint of experience, he rates as an authority.

Mind Your License!

Many local fishermen have been journeying up to the Susquehanna in search of stripers and the other fish that stream affords.

If you fish at the mouth all well and good, but pass Deer Creek on the way upstream and you need a Maryland State license to catch any kind of fish of the salt-water variety. The fresh-water fishing season does not open until the first of July. It's a funny situation and you'd better study the law well before you drop your hook.

Stripers are biting well up that way, incidentally, but they are not very large.

River a Good Bet.

The Potomac is a good bet for anyone who wants a string of fish these days. The water is clear and fairly warm and only a heavy rain will spoil things.

The big rocks are now showing up, but they only seem to go to the fishermen who start soon after daylight and who use cut herring for bait. Try the stream at noon or afterward and your efforts will only be rewarded with small ones around the 1-pound mark. This is rather odd and we can't account for it—you'll just have to take the word of those who consistently fish there every day.

The Potomac is still providing endless strings of big catfish. Only a few black bass are being caught, but that seems to be because few are going after them. A good bait caster would have no trouble landing some beauties between the basin and Chain Bridge.

When the Tidal Basin opens for fishing after midnight of June 15, there will be some really unusual sport. There are no end of good-sized fish there right now and they seem to have almost finished spawning.

Best Ocean Spots.

Ocean City and Wachapreague continue to be the best creel producers these days, with Oregon Inlet more or less out of the picture for a while.

Yesterday we received a two-page, solidly typed letter from James D. Jarman, Ocean City, recording the blue and channel bass catches by local and nearby anglers. The blues range from 5 pounds up and the bass are all over 25. Tom Taylor, of Berlin, Md., landed one of 40 pounds, and a party of New Yorkers topped the record with six, which ran from 39 to 62 pounds.

We've had a number of calls from men anxious to fish in the surf around Ocean City. The best place seems to be Fox Hill Levels, 15 miles south of Ocean City. There is a day and night ferry at this point, operated by Capt. Alfred Peters, for both cars and passengers. The automobile rate is $1 round trip with 50 cents for each passenger. This data for you chaps who can not afford to employ a boat. Our data on Fox Hill Levels and Ocean City, is coming from a most reliable source and many Washington anglers are now over there. It is evidently a good fishing bet right now.

We plan to spend two days over there next week to look the "land" over and be better equipped to advise readers on conditions.

They are still catching plenty of channel bass and weaks at Wachapreague. There must be blues there, but no one seems to be going after them.

Valley League Opens Season Tomorrow

Night Baseball Will Be Tried Out This Year; 8 Clubs to Vie.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

HARRISONBURG, Va., June 6. With the opening of the Valley League Saturday, the eight clubs are assembling an array of college and sandlot baseball talent that promises to provide one of the fastest semipro circuits in the South.

Fans are confident the league will stage faster baseball here than any time since the heyday of the original Valley League in 1922 and 1923. The cream of college and sandlot talent in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia has been assembled by the clubs.

The opening games will find the Front Royal All-Stars playing at Harrisonburg and Charlottesville playing at Staunton. Front Royal and Staunton are new entrants in the circuit, along with the Heurich Brewers of Washington, Orange and Waynesboro.

First Sunday Games.

The first Sunday games will include Culpeper at Waynesboro, Harrisonburg at Charlottesville, Staunton at Orange and Heurich at Front Royal.

Night baseball will be played in Harrisonburg, the first game being scheduled for Saturday, June 15. This will be an innovation in the Shenandoah Valley, and bleachers seating 1,000 fans are being erected in addition to the grandstand.

Only two players are veterans of the 1923 Valley League. They are Mervil Leavel, Harrisonburg first baseman, and Dwight Hulvey, Waynesboro third baseman. They were teammates 12 years ago when Harrisonburg won the pennant.

3 D. C. Women In Maryland Victories

Mrs. Meckley, Mrs. Pray and Mrs. Scott Win in Golf Tourney.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 6.—Shooting a record-breaking 39 on the outgoing nine, Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring, registered an easy 6-and-5 triumph over Mrs. Theodore E. Schluderberg, of the host club, to pace two fellow townswomen from Washington and Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow, of Elkridge, into the semifinal round of the Maryland women's golf championship today at Rolling Road.

Mrs. Jack Scott, Congressional, and Mrs. L. G. Pray, of Manor, are the other survivors in the title battle. They will clash tomorrow morning in the lower semifinal match. The former beat Elizabeth Janney, Green Spring, 6 and 5, and Mrs. Pray eliminated Elizabeth Brawner, 5 and 4.

Apparently, Rolling Road becomes easier for Mrs. Meckley to play with each succeeding round. The Indian Spring star, who won the medal with an 84, has bettered her first nine score by one stroke each day. Mrs. Meckley's 39 today, shot from the men's tee, was only one stroke over women's par and represents the best mark ever registered by a linkswoman at the Catonsville course.

Improves Each Time.

Winning the first hole when Mrs. Schluderberg missed her third shot, Mrs. Meckley had to be content with a par 5 at the second, which was matched by the Rolling Roader. Mrs. Schluderberg, however, took advantage of her opponent's wild tee shot, which found the trap, on the third and won the hole with a 4 to square the match. However, Mrs. Meckley then settled down and won the next six holes, being only one over 4's from the fourth through the ninth.

Becomes 7 Up.

Mrs. Meckley won the tenth with a par 3 against her rival's 4, to become 7 up. The former was trapped at the long eleventh, but salvaged a half and was in trouble again at the twelfth. However, Mrs. Schluderberg took advantage of the slip this time and won with a par 6 to go 6 down. But they halved the next hole with 5's and the match was over.

The cards:

Out—
Mrs. Meckley	4	5	5	3	4	5	5	4	4—39
Mrs. Schluderberg	5	5	4	4	5	6	6	5	5—45
In—
Mrs. Meckley	3	7	7	5
Mrs. Schluderberg	4	7	6	5

Too Steady for Foe.

It was a case of too much steadiness on the part of Mrs. L. G. Pray for Elizabeth Brawner, and the Columbia lassie who eliminated Helen Dettweiler, the defending champion, in yesterday's initial round, bowed, 5 and 4.

Miss Brawner had several fine chances for wins and halves, but failure of her putter to respond at critical times ruined her chances. She had three 3-putt greens. Mrs. Pray gained a 2-up lead on the first nine and was never headed.

Welsh Beaten In Baltimore Net Event

Special Dispatch to The Post.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 6.—Barney Welsh, Washington and National Public Parks champion and the only unseeded man left in the annual Maryland State tennis championships, was eliminated in the quarter-final round this afternoon by the No. 1 seeded player, Berkeley Bell, 6—2, 6—0.

Welsh and Gilbert Hunt, also of Washington, whom the former had upset Wednesday in the singles, paired in the doubles, won straight matches and then succumbed to Bell and Eddie Jacobs, of Baltimore, 6—3, 6—2. The two victories of the Capital City duo came at the expense of Ed Griepenkerl and Harold Follmer, 6—0, 6—1, and Frank G. Roberts and J. B. Adt, 6—0, 6—0.

Heavy Choice to Win.

Bell's triumph over Welsh kept him a heavy choice to win the tournament as he goes into the semifinal round tomorrow. Robert (Lefty) Bryan, of Chattanooga, Tenn., second seeded player; John McDiarmid, of Texas, and W. E. Feibleman, of New York, are the other semifinalists.

Bell battered Welsh's backhand consistently throughout the match. After encountering stubborn opposition in the first set, the New Yorker reeled off the second with the loss of but 7 points.

Welsh was the fourth Capital City entrant to fall in the tournament. Tom Mangan, veteran Columbia Country Club player, and Don Garber, veteran public parks player, both were eliminated in the third round, Tuesday.

Stocks Droop; Traders Wary; Volume Small

Some High-Priced Shares in Demand, Apparently for Income.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—Quiet caution was the watchword in Wall street today. Many traders withdrew to the side-lines, volume was curtailed and price changes mostly were a bit on the down-side.

Metals, baking stocks and some of the issues likely to benefit from the coming of warm weather, such as Coca-Cola, Owens-Illinois Glass and Anchor Cap, were able to move contrary to the trend for fair gains. There was also continued evidence of the search for income return, and some of the higher-priced dividend payers and preferreds were accumulated at advanced prices.

The turnover dropped to 676,950 shares, and the cautious attitude of traders was reflected in the recession of the Associated Press average of 60 stocks to 42.0, off .3 of a point.

Although closely in line with Wall Street expectations, banking attention was focused on the statement of the Bank of France revealing losses of gold in the week ended May 30 of more than 4,800,000,000 francs, bringing the total outflow from that country since the movement began on a large scale at the end of March to approximately 11,000,000,000 francs.

Wheat Menaced By Hessian Fly

Threat Causes Rally but Upturns Fail to Hold.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 6.—Threatened Hessian fly ravages in southern sections of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri brought about wheat price rallies today, but the upturns failed to hold well.

Indications of damage from the insects were supplemented by reports of development of rust in domestic winter wheat and of crop losses from floods. Buying lagged, however, when values bulged, and reactions then followed.

Wheat closed irregular, ⅝ lower to ⅜ higher compared with yesterday's finish, July 84@84⅛; corn ⅜@1¼ off, July 80⅛@80¼, oats ⅛@⅝ down, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Corn and oats were bearishly affected by undoing of spreads against wheat and by word that Argentine exports of corn this week were the largest of the season. Provisions showed dearth of selling despite hog market setbacks.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—An issue of $25,000,000 American Rolling Mill ten-year 4¼ per cent convertible debentures, offered today by a banking syndicate, helped to pry open a little further the door to the new capital market.

The 58-page prospectus describing the offer stated that of the total amount about $5,000,000 will be used for the construction of a reduction mill and equipment. In addition to this about $1,700,000 will be used to increase working capital.

Trade Associations Ready to Assume Many Functions of NRA if Exemptions From Antitrust Laws Will Be Accorded Them; Enforcement Problem Studied.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, June 6. — Intense activity is going on among trade association executives who are seeking to meet the situation created by abandonment of the codes of fair competition. Continuous meetings of members and officers of trade groups are noted at the offices of most of these associations, as efforts are being made to retain the advantages obtained from the codes despite the announced abandonment of support for them on the part of the Federal Government.

Trade association executives who have given much thought to the question state that they face two fundamental problems in their efforts to replace the codes. The first of these is the need for protection from anti-trust law prosecution, to which they have automatically become subject once again as a result of the decision in the Schechter case. In this respect, the trade associations are back to the position they occupied at the time that the national industrial recovery act was passed. Disappointment is expressed that President Roosevelt has not advocated exemption from the anti-trust laws for industries which agree to maintain wages and hours standards, but it is hoped that something may yet be done in this respect.

Federal Incorporation Gets Considerable Support.

Active consideration is being given by several trade association secretaries to a proposal for Federal incorporation of trade bodies. Such Federal incorporation would give the Administration direct control over their operation and methods, to which individual concerns would voluntarily submit by joining such Federal trade associations. In return these trade associations will seek certain stated antitrust law exemptions. Of course, special legislation will be needed both to provide for such Federal incorporations of trade associations and for the desired antitrust law exemptions if this plan is to be placed in effect.

There is deep puzzlement as to the attitude the Administration will display towards antitrust law enforcement, now that the codes are abandoned. It is generally understood that the decision to abandon the codes completely, announced by President Roosevelt, will merely prove a prelude to a later effort to revive the experiment, probably through constitutional amendment or primitive excise taxation. Some trade association executives are free to express their fears that antitrust law prosecutions may be witnessed as a means of building up sentiment within industry for drastic steps that would make possible a revival of the NRA.

The second major problem faced by trade associations is that of enforcement of provisions to regulate competitive practices. Past experience has indicated that at best voluntary conformance to trade practice standards in an entire industry can be expected only during periods of relative prosperity, and seldom for extended periods of time. Mergers, and consequent reduction in the number of competitors in an industry, would facilitate such voluntary compliance. However, trade associations have long been tempted to resort to the contractual or cartel type of organization to facilitate enforcement, whereby members voluntarily sign contracts to abide by stated trade practices. The Supreme Court has upheld the use of this cartel or contract plan in the case of Appalachian Coals, Inc. The enforcement problem, especially if it is to be solved by use of the contractual form of trade association organization, is closely tied up with the modification of the antitrust laws, since signed agreements to regulate competitive practices will not be enforcible unless they conform to the Sherman antitrust law and cognate statutes.

Many Trade Association Services Already Extended.

In the meanwhile, trade association executives are planning to resume or extend the services they have performed in the past, such as interchange of information and even the filing of prices with a central trade association office, pending the time when the future of the antitrust laws and of industrial regulation in general has been clarified. The unknown factor in the situation is the policy the Department of Justice will follow in enforcing the antitrust laws. If an aggressive enforcement drive should be launched, it will discourage trade associations from proceeding further with plans they now have under active discussion to take over certain code functions about whose status under the antitrust laws there is question. Lawyers are already rewriting code provisions to make them less subject to antitrust law attacks.

Another factor holding back plans for expanding trade association functions is the uncertainty as to what the Administration will do in an effort to revive the NRA through new legislative or constitutional expedients.

Trade associations thus face a future that will largely be determined by the extent to which they obtain exemption from the antitrust laws. If such exemption is made extensive enough to permit such associations to operate through signed contracts, as has been the case with German cartels, then a large part of the NRA may be revived through their agency, for they will be able to secure enforcement through suits for damages for violation of a signed contract.

Peoples Drug Sales Up 16.8%.

Racquet Club Reorganization Now Completed

Holders of the 7% Bonds May Exchange Them for 3% Issue.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Reorganization of the Racquet Club capital structure has been completed and all holders of the 7 per cent first mortgage bonds may turn them in for the new 3 per cent ten-year bond loans, it was learned yesterday.

Terms of the reorganization were revealed by Y. E. Booker, chairman of the bondholders protective committee. New bonds to the amount of $575,000, the same as the original mortgage, have been issued. The new securities, dated January 1, 1935, are in coupon form with interest payable January 1 and July 1.

The protective committee disclosed that in the past 3½ years it has collected a total of $19,000 from the club.

Expenses Are $8,425.

After paying all expenses, amounting to $8,425, a balance of $10,831 is available to bondholders. Checks for this sum, which is equivalent to $18.83 on each $1,000 bond, will be delivered with the new securities.

All details of the reorganization were made under section 77(b) of the bankrptcy act and approved by the District Supreme Court. Besides Y. E. Booker, the protective committee was composed of J. Barrett Carter and Wallace W. Chiswell.

Exchange of the old bonds and certificates of deposit is being made by the American Security & Trust Co., trustee.

Bell System Gains.

Continuing the upward trend established earlier this year, telephone installations by the Bell System in May registered a net gatin of 47,600 stations, according to report by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

This compares with a net gain of 43,900 stations for May, 1934, and 49,000 stations for April of the current year. In April, 1934, the net gain was 48,200 stations.

Earnings of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. are reported to be running at about the same level as a year ago. For the first six months of the year earnings probably will be around $3 a share. For the full year 1934 net amounted to $5.96 a share on 18,662,275 shares of capital stock.

Patterson Joins Exchange.

Harold C. Patterson, a partner in the firm of Auchincoiss, Parker & Redpath, yesterday purchased one of the 40 seats on the Washington Stock Exchange. The firm of which he is a member now holds two seats on the local exchange, the other being owned by Chauncey Parker, jr., governor of the exchange.

The firm's main office is located in Washington and they maintain offices in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Wilkes-Barre. In addition to membership on the Washington Stock Exchange, the firm has membership on the New York Stock Exchange, New York Curb Exchange (associate members), the Commodity Exchange, Inc., Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Mr. Patterson has been a partner in the firm since it was organized. He resigned a lieutenancy in the United States Navy to enter the investment business in 1923. He and Mr. Parker have been associated in the investment business almost continuously since that time.

The Washington exchange was founded in 1883 and has since provided the principal local securities mart. G. E. Booker is president; Karl Corby, vice president; James Johnston, secretary, and W. W. Mackall, jr., treasurer.

Power Figures Show Pick-Up in Industry

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—Consumption figures point to a gradual increase in industrial activity, says Electrical World. During four consecutive weeks in May production of electricity remained almost unchanged, with no reduction from the average for April.

"Since the use of current for lighting regularly declines at this season," says the publication, "the amount used industrially must have been rising."

Washington, June 6.—Member bank reserve balances resumed their sharp upward climb for the week ended June 5, the weekly condition statement of the Federal Reserve Bank showing an upturn of $87,000,000 for the week.

The increase more than matched the gain of $81,000,000 in the Nation's monetary stock, the dominant factor in the increased reserve balance.

The totals which member banks now have on reserve is $4,914,000,000, a gain of $1,127,000,000 over last year.

The country's monetary gold stock is now $8,916,000,000, a gain of $1,126,000,000 over the comparable period of 1934.

Federal Issues In All Groups Make Advance

Trading in Government Securities Nearly a Third of Total.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—A strong market for U. S. Government issues overshadowed other developments on the bond market today. Accompanied by active trading, all types of Government securities were in demand at advances ranging from 2-32ds to ⅛ of a point.

Domestic corporation loans went along rather easily with Governments until the final hour when some profit-taking and switching cropped out and there was a slight recession. The main body of bonds, however, were sufficiently resistant to end the day in the plus column.

A new issue of $29,000,000 Commonwealth Edison 3¾s made its initial bow to the investment market and was so well received that a premium above the syndicate price was quickly attained.

Corporate issues attracting attention on the upside included Atlantic Coast Line 4½s at 73, New York Central Consolidated 4s at 82½, Liggett & Myers 5s at 121, International Paper 5s at 69⅜, American Water Works 6s at 85 and North American Edison 5½s at 100½. The Associated Press averages were unchanged to two-tenths of a point higher.

Transfers aggregated $11,033,000, par value, compared with $10,766,000 on Wednesday and the turnover in Governments accounted for $3,370,000 of this total against $2,660,000 the day before.

Weather Aids Cotton Prices

Unfavorable Outlook Results in Net Gains of 7 to 11 Points.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—Cotton was steadier today, owing to an unfavorable view of the weather, but outside interest was restricted. The market closed at net advances of 7 to 11 points.

Initial declines of 3 to 7 points in sympathy with relatively easier cables and under scattered selling proved to be the low levels for the day. Offerings generally were restricted and the market responded easily to moderate buying.

While Washington advices outlining revisions being made in committee to the amendments to the agriculture adjustment act were read with interest, farther developments were awaited. At one time prices were about $1.00 per bale above the early lows, but reactions followed under realizing.

Curb Closings Are Irregular

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 6.—Mixed price trends continued on the curb market today, although trading was less active on the selling. With the exception of a few specialties, quotation changes were narrow. Transfers approximated 179,000 compared with 258,000 the preceding day.

Great Atlantic & Pacific firmed more than 2 points, while a similar loss was shown by Gulf Oil. Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, American Gas & Electric and Creole Petroleum held steady while fractional declines appeared in American Cyanamid "B," Electric Bond & Share, Hiram Walker, Lake Shore and Humble Oil.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—Dealings were of a holiday character on the stock exchange today. Electric and equipment shares were supported on the railway development scheme, while gilt-edged securities and oils drooped due to lack of support. Gold mining issues improved. The market closed quiet.

Paris—Business was quiet on the bourse today as traders waited for a definite sign of the financial policies of the next cabinet. Stocks and bonds fluctuated around yesterday's levels. The market closed steady.

Berlin—Prices weakened on the bourse today due to the hesitancy of buyers. Mining and electric stocks led the downward trend of the market. Slight recoveries were registered at the close.

M'kenzie's Par Places High In Open

Local Pro Subdues Traps in First Day of Tournament.

feet from two cruel bunkers. He putted weakly and missed his putt from 6 feet, taking a 6.

Mackenzie played his iron second on the tenth with a bit of a hook, his ball ending up a foot to the left of the green. Again he used his putter, and 3-putted. On the eleventh he was down for his par 4, and on the 621-yard twelfth, verily a nightmare hole, he was 30 feet from the pin in 3, and stroked carefully for his par 5.

The master stroke came on the thirteenth, a 164-yarder, well trapped with a pear-shaped green. No. 13 was not unlucky for Roland. After banging his tee shot into a bunker hard by the right of the green, Mackenzie waded in with his faithful sand iron and blasted out a sensational 20-footer into the cup for a birdie deuce—the shot that was heard around the course. It was the shot that fired him to greater things.

Makes Brassie Count.

He paired the next two holes in 4s, and on the sixteenth smacked his brassie tee shot on the 234-yard sixteenth to within 3 feet of the pin, and just missed another deuce.

His drive on the 302-yard seventeenth finished on the edge of the green, and he chipped 12 feet from the flag and holed a curling putt for a birdie 3.

One more to go, a crowd of nearly 1,000 gathered around the home green, Mackenzie laid into two lusty wallops and looked for a 40-footer for a bird. He decided to putt carefully and thus did he par the hole and wage an even battle with Old Man Par, a tough customer, believe you me, on this, the toughest course in all the wide world.

Spencer was forced to sink a 6-footer to preserve his par 5 on the first hole, for he missed his third shot, a chip. He rang up two pars in perfect figures of 4 on the next two holes, missing a 4-footer for a birdie 4 by a hair's breadth on the long fifth.

Divot Hurts Spencer.

Spencer really got a bad break on the fifth. His second shot had plenty of "bite" and dug a huge divot in the spot where it landed on the green, and dropped back 2 inches in front of the divot, making a perfect approach putt impossible. Spencer finally three-putted for a 5, one over par.

He came right back with a brilliant birdie deuce on the sixth, laying his three iron to within 10 feet of the pin. By inches he missed a birdie from 40 feet on the seventh, but he remarked, "I'm satisfied with my par."

Undaunted by a hooked tee shot on the short eighth, Spencer chipped from 50 yards to 6 feet of the cup, and made his par 3.

The young man really displayed the old courage on the ninth, a par 5 477-yard, studded with bunkers. His tee shot was in the rough on the right. He tried to get home with a wood, but meandered into a trap 40 feet from the green. He came out weakly into another bunker. Then he blasted out 20 feet from the pin, faced with a curling putt. Spencer deliberated carefully, and spanked it into the cup for a par 5—just when it looked like a 7 was coming his way.

Pars Keep Coming.

Out on that tenth, the Beaver Dam pro lambasted a drive into a bunker 220 yards down the fairway. He reached the green in three, and sank an 8-footer for his par 4. He parred the eleventh, and the viciously long twelfth, after being in a cavernous bunker on the left of the fairway and playing a masterful three iron that split the pin all the way, putting him home for his 5.

Deuces were wild with Cliff. "Give me a spade," he told his caddy, "I'll give this one everything." He did. The ball finished 10 feet from the thirteenth tee, and the young fellow holed out for a deuce—on the very same hole Mackenzie holed out from a bunker for his 2.

The fourteenth was made in regulation figures. On the fifteenth he ran into trouble. His second was pushed into high grass. His third rolled over the green, and he had a putt-saver when he chipped to within 3 feet and took a five, 1 over. He went over on the short sixteenth, being in the trap to the left of the green, on the back edge in 2, and knocking up his niblick shot for a one putt and 4. He used a driver and niblick—and sank a 12-footer for a birdie 3 on the seventeenth.

Drama in Finish.

The finish was dramatic. Here on this eighteenth, "no man's land," with traps here and there to gobble up stray shots, Spencer found himself playing his second 5 feet in front of a bunker. He took a chance, playing a long No. 4 wood. The ball bounced on the green, rolled over like lightning, hit a spectator on the arm, and ended 2 feet past the bank of the green. He had a bad lie, but chipped on carefully—6 feet from the hole.

He wasn't so far that he couldn't make it, but the Beaver Dam pro, putting beautifully all day, saw his ball dribble an inch past the cup and it was a 5—and a 73. When it was announced to the crowd that Cliff Spencer, the unknown, had scored a 73, the crowd cut loose with a terrific cheer.

Al Houghton had a battle with the traps, going in no less than 10 of 'em. He was trapped on the first, second and third, losing a stroke to par on the third. His putt for a birdie 4 hung on the lip on the fourth, and his second on the fifth cost him a five, one over. He was trapped on the short sixth and took a 4, and went one over with a 5 in the seventh. Houghton played the next two holes in 3-5, regulation figures, to go out in 41, four over par.

After being in the trap with his second on the fifteenth, Houghton reached the green and holed out a 50-footer for a par four. He sank a 20-footer for a deuce on the sixteenth, and missed a birdie by inches on the seventeenth. He had only two three-putt greens.

Houghton was denied a birdie by inches from 6 feet on the tenth. He was trapped on the eleventh, took a 5. He shot a 5 and 3 on the next two. Again on the fourteenth his putter misbehaved from 6 feet and it was by an inch that he lost his par 4.

Walper shot six 5s on the first nine and had over par on three holes—the third, fifth and seventh.

He folded up completely on the incoming nine, which he negotiated in 45, 10 over par. Walper started back 4—5—5, but went trap, trap, trap from then on, failing to par a single hole from that point.

Penn Avenue Youth Wins Batting Title

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., June 6.—Rapping out two hits in the final game of the season against Allegany, Roy Whiteman, center field of Penn Avenue High School's cahmpionship nine, won the individual batting title for 1935 by turning in an average of .439 in 41 trips to the plate. Willard "Buddy" Henderson, third sacker, was runner-up with .436. Third place went to Jim Lepley, also of Penn, who hit .413.

Allegany's leading sticker was Carl "Sparky" Sterne, who hammered for .383 and showed real class as an all-around player by starring as a first sacker and winning three of the four games he pitched.

"Doc" McDermott was LaSalle's leading swatsmith with an average of .368.

"Buddy" Henderson was the city's leader in hits with a total of 24.

Derl "Specs" Keller was the No. 1 pitcher with eight victories and one defeat. He won eight out of 11 victories credited to Penn and his lone defenat was at the hands of Allegany. He fanned 74 batters.

ping almost to his eyebrows, Krueger breezed around this 6,981-yard course in 1 under orthodox figures—a truly great score.

Just a Good Golfer.

When he stepped to the first tee late this afternoon with Tom Kerrigan, the New York veteran, as his partner, Krueger was just one of the many good golfers who was expected to take a licking from Old Man Par.

When he reached the ninth green in two healthy wallops and made his birdie 4 to go out in 35, 2 under par, the press boys remarked, "He won't stand the gaff."

But Mr. Krueger, the young Lochinvar from out of the Middle West, shot the last nine in 36, 1 over par, with deuces on the thirteenth and sixteenth, to steal the show and furnish the most surprisingly brilliant performance of the opening 18-hole round.

Is Professional at Beloit.

The new sensation is a professional at Beloit in the daytime. Three times a week at night he pitches for the Beloit semipro team. A caddy in his early days, Krueger took the game seriously only three years ago, and that was when he actually started playing competitive golf.

MacKenzie's par-leveling score stood up under the bombardment of America's famous howitzers for at least five hours today until the little red ball from Beloit blazed a conquering path over the heavily bunkered and terrifically long Oakmont battle front.

The Washington pro, using a brassie off the tee in preference to a driver, banged out a 38, 1 over par, and then shot the last nine holes in 34.

He used up 34 putts and played golf that was fine enough to win any championship.

Spencer Ties for Third.

Hot in pursuit of Mackenzie came another Washingtonian, Cliff Spencer, tall, bronzed, black-haired pro at Beaver Dam, whose two brothers, both Baltimoreans, are professional golfers. Cracking the ball for tremendous distances, chipping and putting with a delicate, meticulous touch, Spencer shot a 37—36—73 and nightfall found him in a four-way tie for third place with Horton Smith, the Joplin ghost, never a national champion, but always a sturdy contender; Jimmy Thompson, the former Washington boy, acclaimed the longest driver in the world, and Herman Barron, young Jewish pro from White Plains, N. Y.

This, the Thirty-ninth National Open championship which dates back to that memorable October day in 1895 when a fellow named Rawlins won at Newport Golf Club, when there were only 11 entries in the field, produced a bundle of thrills and dramatic occurrences.

Washington's own Cliff Spencer, who never has won anything important in his eight-year golfing career, provided a bit of drama when he missed a 6-foot putt by inches on the eighteenth hole. He needed the putt for a 72, but his great try, under pressure with the eyes of close to 1,000 riveted on him, was barely an inch wide of the cup. Spencer's putting performance was nothing short of spectacular, as a check-up shows that he used up only 28 for the 18 holes—something unusual in an Open championship at Oakmont.

Dizzy Dean Among Open Spectators

the blade. She is followed around by a representative of the firm who is never far away, and explains the golf clubs.

She is still heartbroken that she was not allowed to remain an amateur. She had a rather touching meeting with tall, dignified, stately Presscott Bush, president of the U. S. G. A., the amateur golf association which barred her as an amateur. They shook hands, and gave one another a warm and friendly smile and he said he hoped she understood why it was not possible to let her play as an amateur, and she said, "Yes, suh, ah do. But ah sure did want to be an amateur."

And then she gulped a big gulp, like a child. It reminds me of that night in Los Angeles during the Olympics at the garden party out back of the hotel where the Olympic girl athletes were living and suddenly, everybody in the whole huge party, girls and boys, joined hands and danced a joyous, youthful dance around the entire garden, and she stood off to one side, tall and slim in her track slacks and sweat shirt with the American shield on the breast. The chain bent close to her and suddenly broke, and some one yelled: "Come on, Babe, get in here." And she said "Ah caint; ah got to compete tomorrow."

Poor, lonely Mildred Ella. Always on the outside, looking in. Dizzy Dean looks bad. He is thin and has little color, and looks worried and unhappy. For the first time I noted that the black hair at the back of his head is graying. He is the picture of a man who is unhappy in his work. He wants desperately to leave the St. Louis club.

He was down in the mouth and as low mentally as Ruth was on closing day last year when he sat in the Yankee dugout and said he never wanted to play ball again.

I asked Dizzy whether he liked golf and he said he would rather play golf than baseball. Now, you know that isn't true, that baseball is meat and drink and air and life to him, but to some extent it measures the despondency into which he had sunk. He said when they got back to St. Louis there would be a meeting to decide about whether he could get away from the Cardinals.

There seems little hope for the breach between Dizzy and his employers to be closed. Dizzy and Frisch pass one another by like strangers. Dizzy told Judge Landis in the presence of Sam Breadon that there wasn't a man on the Cardinal Club who wouldn't give a year's pay to be out of the organization. He said the Cardinals had better young ball players on their farms than they had on the club now and could afford to let go the men who were unhappy playing for Breadon.

The real, sensitive Dean behind the showy public Dean was badly hurt when Frisch and his clubmates accused him of not bearing down on his pitches. It is a silly accusation, at that. Every pitcher is throwing them over for his averages and his reputation, as well as his club. The Cards may as well trade Dean, for all the good they will get out of him in his present frame of mind. His muscles will bear down, but the joy has gone out of his heart and there is no impish glee on the ball to dazzle the batsmen as it sails over.

The golf? Oh, yes. Whosis had a 73 and Whatsis had a 75, and Thingumbob shot a fine 72. But all the good tales today came out of the hearts of the strange and famous people who followed along in the wake of the players and watched with half an eye the hissing tee shot and the arching approach, and for the rest brooded within themselves over the strange complications of living.

Landis May Rule In Barring of Pitts

Navy. I was 19 and I thought you couldn't get any more than three or four years even for murder.

"I held the gun in the robbery. I was guilty as hell.

"You know, those five years did a lot for me. It sounds funny to hear a fellow say that who's just been released from prison, but it's the truth. I'm glad to be out and I'm ready to 'go to bat' to prove to society that I can be a good citizen."

Pitts' efforts toward rehabilitation are under the guidance of Warden Lewis E. Lawes—"the grandest guy in the world"—who viewed the numerous baseball offers which came to the youth as a splendid gesture of people to help a former convict resume his place in society.

"I've been in this place over 30 years," said the warden at his breakfast table when Pitts came over to his house for his farewells, "and I've never seen anything like this. It's magnificent."

National Celebrity.

The young Alabaman, who entered prison as a nonentity, walked out jauntily through the penitentiary's massive gates this morning as a national celebrity.

Flashlights flickered and news reel cameras ground as Pitts embraced his mother, Mrs. Irma Pitts Rudd—"the best part of the picture."

He had $58.32 in the pockets of his well-pressed gray suit, wore a gray shirt and red tie.

A coat of tan and a sun-peeled nose made him look like a young college athlete.

Pitts' treasury consisted of a $20 gift from the State and $38.32 which he had earned as a coal passer and gardener at the warden's home.

John Law, former Notre Dame gridiron star and prison athletic director, was on hand to salute his most illustrious protege.

After going to Warden Lawes' home to bid his sponsor farewell, "Alabama" rode to the railroad station in the warden's limousine, accompanied by Mrs. Lawes, her 13-year-old daughter, Cheri, and his mother.

Then he boarded the New York Central train for Albany.

His new station in life was emphasized by the glittering array of linen and silver on the Pullman diner, in decided contrast to the plain wooden board on which the prison inmates eat with tin utensils.

"I want to see Babe Ruth hit a home run," he said, as he proceeded with breakfast. "We always used to read about the Babe up there.

"Inmates would argue about the merits of the Babe's case. Some said that he had received an awful lot from baseball, but others argued that he had also given it a great deal. That's how I feel about it, too.

"I played baseball at prison just to have something to keep my mind occupied. That's the way it is up there. It doesn't matter how able you are. It's how hard you try.

"Eight years was like an awfully long time for me. I still feel like I'm dreaming."

Once Overs

By H. I. Phillips

An Open Letter to Babe Ruth.

Dear Bambino:

I just don't know what it's all about, this sudden aversion to you on the part of organized baseball. It gets in my hair. I don't know how your behavior has been, if any. As a baseball player you are just a shadow of yourself at the peak, and you unravel pretty easily afield or at bat. But it sours me on baseball to think that those magnates are registering such complete unconcern about you.

* * * *

I can't exactly weep for you, Babe. You made a fortune in baseball, you were in the big dough many years, and you were a star almost from the beginning, but I don't savvy this stuff about baseball not owing you anything. Baseball owes you nothing, eh? Okay. Then racing owes nothing to Man o' War, the steel industry owes nothing to Bessemer, Rome owes nothing to Caesar, art owes nothing to Michelangelo, music doesn't owe a thing to Chopin, aviation owes nothing to the Wright brothers and the Greatest Show on Earth doesn't owe a dime to the elephant!

* * * *

It's okay, eh, for baseball to toss you out on your ear and leave you where you land, without as much as a sigh? Okay, Bambino. Then it's all right to let the Washington Monument topple because of its age, all right to shoot a lifeguard because he slept late after a rescue, and okay to slay Santa Claus because somebody found a bottle of beer in his sleigh.

* * * *

* * * *

Well, I ain't saying any club needs you, Babe. I ain't saying that you're much help to any ball team any more. I ain't even saying you can hit a grounded Zeppelin with a bed slat any more, but I am saying that baseball never did a more shortsighted thing in its life than in kicking you out of the house like you was an abandoned flivver.

* * * *

You broke every record in baseball. You were the greatest popular idol any sport has ever known. You meant more to the kids than any figure in sport. You were George Herman Ruth, the Babe, the Bambino. And you still answer to those names. Baseball ought to have a place for you to its honor and glory.

* * * *

And if it hasn't, it shouldn't be so Simon Legree-ish about it.

GUS Q. FANN.
